VOLTAREN®

Delayed-Release (enteric-coated) Tablets

CATAFLAM®

INDIANALITY SAVE USANG
Voltagen Delayed. Release or Cataltam Immediate. Release Tablets are indicated for the acute and chronic treatment of signs and symptoms of rheumatoid arthoris, ostewarthniss, and aritylosing spondylfis. Doly Cataltam is indicated for the management of pain and primary dysmenorthes, when prompt pain relief is desired, because it is formulated to provide earlier plasma concentrations of dictofenac (see CLINICAL PHARIMACOLOGY, Pharimacokinetics and Clinical Studies)

CONTRAINDICATIONS

Disiblence mether formulation, Voltaren or Cataflam, is contraindicated in patients with hypersensitivity to dicidenac. Dicidenac should not be given to applients who have beginned ashma, urticaria, or other allergic type reactions after taking aspirin or other NSAIOs. Severe, rarely fatal, anaphylactic-like reactions to dicidenac have been reported in such patients.

WARNINGS Gastroiotestinal Effects

Repticulicational Effects

Repticulication and gastroinlessimal bleeding have been reported in patients recoving diciolerace. Physicians and patients should therefore remain alert to ruleration and bleeding in patients treated chromically with diciolerace even in the absence of previous G. I. tract symptoms. It is recommended that patients be maintained on the lowest does of diciolerace possible, consistent with achieving a satisfaction; therequebic response. Risks of G. I. Ulcerations, Bleeding, and Perforation with NSAID Therapy. Senous gastrointesthal protocyts such as bleeding, ulceration, and perforation can occur at any time, with or without warming symptoms, in patients breated chronically with NSAID therapy. Although minor upper gastrointesthal problems, such as dyspepsia, are common, usually developing early in therapy, physicians should remain alert for ulceration and bleeding in patients treated chronically with NSAID even in the absence of previous G. I. tract symmotrons. In patients observed in clinical tract of several months of 2 years' duration, symptomatic upper G. I. ulcers, gross bleeding, on perforation appear to occur approximately 1% of patients for 3-6 months, and in about 2%-4% of patients breated for 1 year. Physicians should inform patients about the signs and/or symptoms of senious G. I. toxincty and what steps to take if they occur.

Studies to date have not dentrified any subset of patients most all risk of developing peptic ulceration and bleeding Except for a prior in story of senious. G. I events and other risk factors known to be associated with erefore developing peptic ulceration and bleeding of co. no risk factors fe or all each of the contractions.

Studies to date have not indenthed any subset or patients not at risk of developing peptic useration and presering. Except for a prior instity of serious CB. Levents and other risk actions known to be associated with peptic used reduces, such as allowinds. In some studies (e.g. age, sex) have been associated with increased risk. Elderly or debilifated patients seem to tolerate ulceration or bleeding less well than other individuals, and most spontaneous reports of fatal 6.1 events are in this opquisition. Studies to date are inconclusive concerning the relative risk of various NSAIDs in causing such reactions. High doese of any NSAID probably carry a greater risk of these reactions, although controlled clinical trials showing this do not exist in most cases. In considering the use of relatively large doses (within the recommended dosage range), sufficient benefit should be articipated to offset the potential increased risk of G.I. (spicity.

Hegatic Effects

negator circust
As with other NSAIDs, elevations of one or more liver tests may occur during dictoleriac therapy. These laboratory abnormalifies may progress, may remain unchanged, or may be transient with confinited therapy. Borderline elevations (i.e., less than 5 mass the ULN [= the Upper Limit of the Kormal range]), or greater elevations of transaminases occurred in about 15% of dictoleriac treated patients. Of the hepatic enzymas, ALT (SQFT) is the one range), or greater elevations tradistantiases occurred in about 17% or circulerlator-teach patients. Or the inspirate circulars and a trade of the monitoring of liver injury. In clinical trails, meaningful elevations (i.e., more than 3 times the ULK) or AST (SQDT) (ALT was not measured and its duties) occurred in about 2% of approximately 5700 patients at some time during Voltaren treatment. In a large, open, controlled trail, meaningful elevations of ALT and/or AST occurred in about 4% of 3700 patients treated for 2-6 months, including marked elevations (i.e., more than 8 times the ULK) in about 1% of the 3700 patients in that open-basel study, a higher incidence of borderline (less than 3 times the ULK), moderate (3-6 times the ULK), and marked (-8 times the ULK) in elevations of ALT or ST was observed in patients recording diochers when compared to other KSAIDs. Transaminase elevations were seen more frequently in patients with observations than in those with resumstand arthritis (see AOVERSE REACTIONS).

In addition to the enzyme elevations seen in clinical thats, rare cases of severe hepatic reactions, including joundice and fatal full minant hepatitis, have ben reported.

Physicians should measure transaminases periodically in patients receiving long-term therapy with dicilerac, because severe hepitotricity may develop without a prodrome of distinguishing symptoms. The optimum times for making the first and subsequent transaminase measurements are not known. In the largest U.S. trail (open-label) that innoved 3700 patients monitored first at 8 weeks and 1200 patients monitored again at 24 weeks, almost all meaningful elevations in transaminase were detected before patients became symptomatic. In 42 of the 51 patients in all trads who developed marked transaminase elevations, abnormal lests occurred duming the first 2 monitors of the stage with dicilerac. Based on this experience, it dicilerac is used chromacilly, the first transaminase measurement should be made no later than 8 weeks after the start of dicilerac tratment. As with other NSAIOs, abnormal linest elespress or overset, of indiciled spisors and of symptoms consistent with liver disease develop, or if systemic manifestions occur eleoperations and the spin of the patiency of the symptoms of hepatiotricity (e.g., nausea, fadigue, letharty, printus, joundoe, right upper quadrant tendemess, and "Tu-like" symptoms, and the appropriate action patients should take if these signs and symptoms appear.

PRECAUTIONS

Afteric Reactions: As with other NSAIDs, allergic reactions including anaphylaxis have been reported with dictofenac. Specific allergic manifestations consisting of swelling oil eyelids, lips, pharym, and darymc, unticatia, asthmia, and bronchospasim, sometimes with a concomitant fall in blood pressure (severe at bines) have been observed in clinical trials and/or the marketing experience with dictofenac. Anaphylaxis has rarely been reported from foreign sources; in U.S. clinical thats with dicidenac in over 6000 patients. It case of anaphylians was reported. In controlled clinical thats, allergic reactions have been observed at an incidence of 0.5%. These reactions can occur without prior exposure to the drug.

Fluid Relambon and Edema: Fluid retention and edema have been observed in some patients taking dicidenac. Therefore, as with other NSA(Os.

dictofenac should be used with caution in patients with a history of cardiac decompensation, hypertension, or other conditions predisposing to fluid Recoal Effects: As a class, NSAIOs have been associated with renal papillary necrosis and other abnormal renal pathology in long-ferm administration to animals. In oral dioblems studies in animals, some vendence of renal toxicity was noted. Solidate incidents of papillary necrosis were observed in a few animals at high doses (20-100 mg/kg) in several babon subsource studies. In pehents treated with dioblems, rare cases of interstitial nephritis and papillary necrosis where expended see ANVERSE REACTIONS).

A second form of renal toxicity, generally associated with NSAIDs, is seen in patients with conditions leading to a reduction in renal blood flow or blood.

À second form of transitionisty, generally associated with NSAIOs, is seen in patients with continons leading to a reduction on renal blood low or blood volume, where renal prostaglandins have a supportive role in the maintenance of renal perfusion. In these patients, administration of an NSAIO results in a dose-dependent decrease in prostaglandin synthesis and, secondanly, in a reduction of near blood flow, which may precipitate over the rail afture. Patients at greatest risk of this reaction are flower with impared renal function, hearf altiture, lover displanction, those taking disurents and the elderly. Ossonthination of NSAIO therapy is spready followed by recovery to the generatement state. Cases of significant renal failure in patients receiving diodelena have been reported from marketing experience, but were not observed in over 4000 patients in clinical trails during which seems creationize and 601 values were greater than 2.0 migdl and 40 mg dl., respectively, while on diodelena (in own to the first patients creatione 2.3 mg dl. and 804/28 mg/dl.). Since diodelena metabolities are eliminated primarily by the kidneys, patients with significantly impaired renal function should be more closely monifored than subjects with normal renal function.

Prophyria: These old indelence impeatures with begalate porphyra should be avoided. To dafe, 1 patient has been described in whom diodelenac probably triggered a clinical attack of porphyra. The postulated mechanism, demonstrated in rats, for causing such attacks by diodelenae, as well as some other NSAIOs, is through stimulation of the porphyran precursor delta-aminolevulinic acid (ALA). Intermation for Patients.

The side effects of these drugs of its class, is not free of side effects. The side effects of these drugs can cause discomfort and, rarely, there are more senous side effects, such as gastrointestnal bleeding, and more rarely, liver toworly (see WARNINGS, Hepaite Effects), which may result in hospitalization and even fatal outcomes.

NSAIDs are often essential agents in the management of arthritis and have a major role in the management of pain, but they also may be commonly employed for conditions that are less serious.

Physicians may wish to discuss with their patients the potential risks (see WARNINGS, PRECAUTIONS, and ADVERSE REACTIONS) and likely benefits of NSAID treatment, particularly when the drugs are used for less serious conditions where treatment without NSAIDs may represent an acceptable alternative to both the patient and physician.

Laboratory Tests

Laboratory Tests

Because serious G. I. tract ulceration and bleeding can occur without warning symptoms, physicians should follow chronically treated patients for the signs and symptoms of ulceration and bleeding and should inform them of the importance of this follow-up fisse WARNINGS, Risk of G. I. Ulcerations, Bleeding, and Perforation with MSAIO Therapy). If dicidlenacis used chronically, patients should also be instructed to report any signs and symptoms that might be the hepastoxicity of dicidlenac; these symptoms may become evident between visits when periodic liver laboratory fests are performed (see WARNINGS, Hepatic Effects).

Aspina: Concomitant administration of diclofenac and aspirin is not recommended because diclofenac is displaced from its binding sites during the

Frueiro minimity
Invitro, diciblenac interferes minimally or not at all with the protein binding of salicylic acid (20% decrease in binding), follbutamide, predinsolone (10% decrease in binding), or warfann. Benzylpenicillin, ampicillin, oxacillin, chlordetecycline, doxycycline, caphalothin, erythromyon, and sulfamethox-azole have no influence in vitro on the protein binding of diciolenac in human serum.

Oran/Laboratory Test Interactions

Ong Laboratory Test Interactions
Effect on Blood Caegolabora: Dictolerac increases platelet aggregation time but does not affect bleeding time, plasma thrombon clotting time, plasma fibringon, or factory Y and VIII of Statistically significant changes in prothrombin and partial thrombon plasma times have been reported in normal volunteers. The mean changes were observed to be less than 1 sepond in both instances, however, and are unlikely to be clinically important. Oxclerace is a prostaglandin synthesias enhibitor, however, and all drugs that inhibit prostaglandin synthesis interfere with platelet function to some degree, therefore, platents with onay be adversely affected by such an action should be carefully observed.

Tearagement Effects
There are no adequate and well-controlled studies in pregnant women. Oxidetenat should be used during pregnancy only if the benefits to the mother useful, the potential next to the fetus.

Of the more than 6000 patients treated with diciolerac in U.S. trials, 31% were older than 65 years of age. No overall difference was observed between efficacy, adverse event or pharmacokinetic profiles of older and younger patients. As with any NSAID, the elderly are likely to tolerate adverse reactions less well than younger patients.

ADVERSE REACTIONS

Abbress reaction information is derived from blinded, controlled and open-label clinical finals, as well as worldwide marketing expenence. In the description below, rates of more common events represent clinical study results, rater events are derived principally from marketing experience and publications, and accurate rate estimates are generally not possible.

comes to saving money through group malpractice programs, we wrote the book.

The costs associated with medical malpractice insurance have sky-rocketed. Yet health care providers cannot afford to reduce limits and liabilities to control these costs.

You'll find the solution in the Medigroup Purchasing Program, designed by the special risk experts at Cameron M. Harris and Company. By generating premium savings through increased buying power, hundreds of physicians, hospitals, clinics, and other health care providers throughout North Carolina have already gained bottom-line benefits from this program. Now it's your chance to save, too.

Tobacco Control

If Not Now, When?

Adam O. Goldstein, MD

Few medical questions have stirred such public interest or created more scientific debate than the tobaccohealth controversy...The subject does not lend itself to easy answers. Nevertheless, it has been increasingly apparent that answers must be found.

-Luther Terry, US Surgeon General, 19641

...the habit has spread to females in developed countries and to much larger numbers of males in developing countries. If these smoking patterns persist...the current global total of about three million deaths per year from tobacco would...reach about 10 million per year by the time the children of today reach middle age.

—Richard Peto, et al, Mortality from Smoking in Developed Countries, 1994²

In the United States, you have a company that is under siege...In the international division, it's the opposite. We are growing [like] gangbusters...I don't believe I would do anything that would benefit me if I thought...that I was lying to society, that I was doing something truly immoral. Everybody knows that smoking must be a terrible idea. I mean, it's not a secret.

—David E.R. Dangoor, Executive Vice President,
Phillip Morris International

As you examine the articles in this landmark special edition of the Journal you may discover, as I did, several surprising and disturbing trends in the epidemiology of tobacco use in our state, the risk of adolescent addiction to tobacco, and the extent of tobacco-related deaths. As individuals, physicians have virtually broken their own personal addictions to tobacco, but many patients, policy makers, and professional organizations remain physically or institutionally addicted. We still have a long way to go before we see a "tobacco-free society" with low rates of tobacco-caused diseases and little financial dependence on tobacco income.

Dr. Goldstein, guest editor of this special issue, is Clinical Assistant Professor, UNC Department of Family Medicine, CB# 7595, Chapel Hill 27599-7595.

Four themes unite this special edition: 1) Tobacco has been the major, known, preventable cause of death and disease in our society for at least 30 years, yet few people truly understand the scope and magnitude of the problem. 2) The principal targets of tobacco addiction in the US have been and will continue to be adolescents and children. 3) Tobacco farmers have legitimate concerns and interests, different in most ways from those of tobacco companies. 4) Physicians, especially those in North Carolina, must become more involved in educational and advocacy efforts about tobacco—with their patients, in their offices, in their communities, and statewide.

Tobacco and Health

Cigarette smoking is associated with a 70% increase in age-specific death rates...is causally related to lung cancer...is the most important cause of chronic bronchitis...[of] coronary artery disease...The habitual use of tobacco is related primarily to...the pharmacological actions of nicotine.

—Surgeon General's Report on Smoking and Health, 1964¹

What can we say about the health effects of tobacco that has not already been said in more than 40,000 scientific articles? A simple but incomplete answer is that if US public policy was based primarily on science, we would need no new studies, ever, on the health effects of tobacco. The federal tobacco excise tax would already be $2 instead of 32 cents; the Occupational Safety and Health Administration would have already implemented comprehensive clean indoor air workplace regulations; tobacco advertising, including the sponsorship of sporting events, would be banned; schools would prohibit teachers, coaches, and students from using tobacco products anywhere on school grounds; and successful, billion-dollar lawsuits would have forced tobacco companies to compensate millions of victims and their families.

A more informed answer, though, would say that the public has not learned enough about the adverse health effects of tobacco use. North Carolinians greatly underestimate the number of deaths caused by tobacco every year. And young North Carolinians cannot make informed decisions about tobacco because scientific knowledge is clouded by the $4 billion spent every year to make an unhealthy product look sexy, safe, sophisticated, and financially rewarding.

Few of us, whether smokers or non-smokers, policy makers or leaders know that:

- tobacco and tobacco smoke contain hydrogen cyanide (used in gas chambers), arsenic (a poison), formaldehyde (an embalming fluid), phenol (a disinfectant), lead, and more than 45 carcinogenic compounds, like benzopyrene;
- that the carcinogenic potency of benzopyrene is 50,000 times greater than that of saccharin;
- that an average cigarette delivers 1 mg of nicotine and acute ingestion of 60 mg of nicotine is lethal;
- that spitting tobacco has nitrosamine levels hundreds of times higher than those permitted in bacon or beer;
- that nicotine rapidly crosses the placenta to the fetus, usually circulating at higher levels in the fetus than in the mother.⁴

In this context, all of the authors in this issue of the Journal have made important and unique contributions. For instance, Dr. Gene Lengerich, as director of the state's Office of Epidemiology, has compiled the first detailed analysis of the prevalence of smoking, and its contribution to death and economic damage in North Carolina. His findings that one out of every five deaths in North Carolina is causally related to tobacco use, and that tobacco-related morbidity and mortality cost the state more than $2 billion a year are staggering!

Tobacco and Youth

One out of three adolescents in the United States is using tobacco by age 18...and few people begin to use tobacco after age 18. Preventing young people from starting to use tobacco is the key to reducing the death and disease caused by tobacco use.

—Donna Shalala, Secretary of Health and Human Services, A Report of the Surgeon General, 1994⁵

A year or two ago, my daughter came home from school and said..."I want to know what you think about cigarettes." And I told her that a lot of people believe that cigarette smoking is addictive, but I don't believe it...But if she asked me about the health consequences, I would tell her that I certainly don't think it's safe to smoke. It's a risk factor for lung cancer, for heart disease...I'd have to tell her it's a bad idea."

—Stephen C. Parrish, Senior Vice President Phillip Morris, USA³

No one, it seems, wants children to use tobacco. Public health figures appropriately point out that tobacco addictions cause disease regardless of age, gender, ethnicity, or geography. In contrast, tobacco companies emphasize that tobacco use is "okay for adults." Tobacco companies give out tobacco samples, allow candy cigarettes to use trademark brand logos, promote their cigarettes with cartoon characters, give away merchandise that appeals directly to children, sponsor sporting events, protest against strict enforcement of laws regulating tobacco, and ignore diseases caused by tobacco use in their educational materials.

One paradox is found in the current NC law that prohibits youth purchase of tobacco products. Joanna Cohen and colleagues unequivocally show that it is easy for almost any youth in North Carolina to buy cigarettes, that the law against selling tobacco products to minors is often ignored, and that vending machines provide a universally successful avenue for addicting minors to tobacco. Adolescents consume almost one billion packs of cigarettes and more than 25 million containers of spitting tobacco every year, producing sales topping $1.25 billion and profits of over $220 million.6

Many North Carolina youth want a different future, as demonstrated in the focus group research of Dr. Rudy Jackson and colleagues. They found that youth want to protect themselves from tobacco addiction. Rather than being passive victims, these youth make a persuasive case for youth-directed educational, legislative, media, and advocacy efforts in tobacco control. Decreased adolescent tobacco consumption may depend on innovative, youth-led advocacy efforts.

Tobacco Companies and Tobacco Farmers

[T]obacco will remain a very strong industry for many years to come. I certainly pledge my full support to the industry that means so much to the economy of the state."

—James Graham, Commissioner, NC Dept. of Agriculture, NC Tobacco Report 19947

The revenues from tobacco excise taxes generally fund projects that benefit all citizens."

—Samuel D. Chilcote, Jr., President, Tobacco Institute, The Tax Burden on Tobacco, 1992⁰

In 1994, for the first time, the American public saw tobacco industry executives testify before Congress that tobacco was not addictive; that they did not want kids to smoke; that tobacco advertising did not influence consumption; and that the "scientific evidence" on environmental tobacco smoke was "flawed." There also seemed to be a chance that the federal tobacco excise tax might be increased to $1, that the Food and Drug Administration might regulate the nicotine content of tobacco, and that lawsuits against tobacco companies might bear fruit.

The end of 1994 revealed a different picture. There was no increase in the federal tobacco excise tax. US Rep. Thomas Bliley (R-Va.), a staunch defender of tobacco, is the likely new chair of the House Health and Environment Subcommittee. He has promised to derail any Congressional action detrimental to the tobacco industry. The tobacco industry still has never lost a major lawsuit. These events have lead many to conclude that tobacco companies will see double digit profits this year.

Judging by figures from 1989-1994, it is easy to agree with those predictions. Tobacco companies made more than $50 billion in profits during the past six years, and 1994 was near record level due to the continued growth of overseas markets. Despite diversification, the percentage of tobacco company profits due to tobacco remains very high and has not significantly decreased.

The tobacco farmer has not shared in tobacco's profitability. Tom O'Connor carefully documents how and why North Carolina tobacco farmers will one day become an endangered species. The irony is that, despite the claims of the tobacco industry, the declining importance of tobacco in North Carolina has very little to do with actions by the public health community. The trend toward fewer tobacco farmers, making less money, is a consequence of policies enacted by tobacco companies themselves. The tobacco companies import foreign tobacco, decrease jobs by mechanization, and raise the price of their product far more rapidly than all federal tobacco excise tax initiatives. Tobacco farmers got significantly less of the tobacco dollar in 1991 than they did in 1967 (from 9% to 3%, or a decrease of 66%), while tobacco manufacturers got significantly more (from 19% to 53%, or an increase of 179%).

North Carolina's economy relies less on tobacco today than it did in 1967, and the state continues to diversify its agricultural base. Still, policy makers in the state overestimate by a factor of three the importance of tobacco to the state's economy. Although tobacco is an important economic crop, state leaders need to help tobacco farmers with alternative crops or careers rather than keep them enslaved to a future in decline. As the short essay by Dr. David Altman in this issue vividly relates, it is time for North Carolina's tobacco farmers, the public health community, and leaders in government, agriculture, and economics to come together in common dialogue.

Responsibilities of Physicians and Organized Medicine

Substantial work will be required to translate the justification, the means, and the will into a world in which young people no longer want to smoke. I, for one, relish the task."

—M. Joycelyn Elders, MD, US Surgeon General, A Report of the Surgeon General, 1994⁵ I am writing to encourage you to take immediate action to urge the adoption of local restrictions on smoking in public places..."

—F.M. "Mac" Mauney, Jr., MD, Past President, NCMS, Letter to NC Boards of Health, July 1993

What is the appropriate role in tobacco control for physicians and organized medicine in 1995 and beyond? It is appropriate that this Journal comes 30 years after the first "Surgeon General's Report on Smoking and Health." Several articles, such as the interview with Dr. Alan Blum and the article by Dr. Tom Houston, discuss the importance of physician leadership and organized medicine in reducing the number of Americans who use tobacco.

The NCMS created the Tobacco Control Task Force in 1991 to recommend policies designed to make North Carolina smoke-free by the year 2000. From 1968-1990, before the Task Force was established, the Medical Society had only two policy statements about tobacco. In the past three years, it has added nine more, bringing the Society in line with or ahead of other southern state medical societies, like those in Virginia, Kentucky, and South Carolina. Past NCMS presidents Drs. John Dees, Mac Mauney, Jr., and Elizabeth Kanof have encouraged success of the Task Force. The fruits of such leadership is shown in articles by Drs. Georjean Stoodt, Clare Sanchez, and Richard Rosen. Talented and dedicated individuals across the state are willing to speak out, due in part to the success of efforts such as Project ASSIST, described by Sally Malek.

Community-based strategies are likely to anchor the next 30 years of tobacco control. As physicians in North Carolina, we will have to think about ourselves in new and challenging ways. Will we divest ourselves, our hospitals, our medical foundations, and our affiliated institutions from tobacco industry stock? Will we sponsor tobacco-free advertising contests by schoolchildren? Will we speak out in the media or at hearings to decrease tobacco use, prevent exposure to environmental tobacco smoke, and prohibit tobacco sponsorship of sporting events? Will we speak out about the hypocrisy of exporting our number one preventable disease to Africa, Asia, and Europe? Will the NCMS continue to advance an agenda for tobacco control in measurable and meaningful ways? If physicians in North Carolina answer yes to these questions, we will contribute significantly to improving the health of citizens in our state, our country, and the world. \Box

Where will your family be in 20 years?

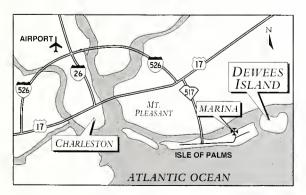

M ost people feel they have a relatively solid answer to that question ... because they have planned carefully for their family's financial and educational needs.

But where will they be geographically? There's no way to know.

All you know for sure is that you're going to want to see your children and grandchildren as much as possible ... wherever they're living.

Now is the time to do something about it ... by establishing a retreat home with roots ... a place where the entire family will look forward to coming together, season after season, and year after year.

Dewees Island, minutes from historic Charleston, SC, is just such a place.

Much like the plantations of the Old South, a home on Dewees is a place to come to ... a place that a family will sink spiritual roots, and experience together the secrets of life on the coast ... a place filled with things to do, and experiences to discover.

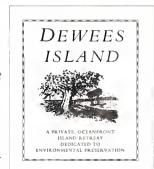

To understand Dewees, you've got to see her beauty ... talk with other property owners ... walk her shores.

Come explore this boat-access, ocean-front retreat. The island will become home to only 150 families, and 40% of our available property has been sold. Prices start at $165,000, with 2-acre oceanfront lots from $315,000.

Establish a legacy that will live in your family forever ... call 1-800-444-7352 or (803) 886-8783.

He wanted to jump. We said, "how high?"

CPO Prosthetics & Orthotics patient Brandon Barbour was born in 1983 with spina bifida. With the aid of his orthoses, he walked before he was two. Today this remarkable child, who loves to jump on his trampoline, is an active fifth grader who keeps up with the other children in his class.

In January of 1994, CPO was the first facility to bring the Oregon Orthotic System (OOS) to the region, and Brandon was one of the first patients to be fit with the System. But, the Oregon System is more than a simple orthotic device. It is a complete orthotic treatment plan, which addresses deformities in all planes, and the System uses computer and video analysis to insure the best results.

CPO will be bappy to schedule an in-service presentation on the OOS or on any other orthotic or prosthetic related topic for you or your entire staff. For more information, please call us at 1-800-394-6362 for the location nearest you.

BRIEF SUMMARY

PERCOCET® (Oxycodone (WARNING: may be habit forming) and Acetaminophen

INDICATIONS AND USAGE PERCOCET is indicated for the relief of moderate to moderately severe pain

CONTRAINDICATIONS PERCOCET should not be administered to patients who are hypersensitive to oxycodone or acetaminophen.

WARNINGS Drug Dependence: Oxycodone can produce drug dependence of the morphine type and, therefore, has the potential for being abused. Psychic dependence, physical dependence and tolerance may develop upon repeated administration of PERCOCET, and it should be prescribed and administered with the same degree of caution appropriate to the use of other oral narcotic-containing medications. Like other narcotic-containing medications, PERCOCET is subject to the Federal Con-trolled Substances Act (Schedule II).

PRECAUTIONS General: Head Injury and Increased Intracranial Pressure: The respira tory depressant effects of narcotics and their capacity to elevate cerebrospinal fluid pressure may be markedly exaggerated in the presence of head injury, other intracranial lesions or a pre-existing increase in intracranial pressure. Furthermore, narcotics produce adverse reactions which may obscure the clinical course of patients with head injuries.

Acute Abdominal Conditions: The administration of PERCOCET or other narcotics may obscure the diagnosis or clinical course in patients with acute abdominal conditions.

Special Risk Patients: PERCOCET should be given with caution to certain patients such as the elderly or debilitated, and those with severe impairment of hepatic or renal function, hypothyroidism, Addison's disease, and prostatic hypertrophy or urethral stricture.

operating machinery. The patient using PERCOCET should be cautioned accordingly.

Drug Interactions: Patients receiving other narcotic analgesics, general anesthetics, phenothiazines, other tranquilizers, sedative-hypnotics or other CNS depressants (including alcohol) concomitantly with PERCOCET may exhibit an additive CNS depression. When such combined therapy is contemplated, the dose of one or both agents should be reduced.

The use of MAO inhibitors or tricyclic antidepressants with oxycodone preparations may increase the effect of either the antidepressant or oxycodone.

The concurrent use of anticholinergics with narcotics may produce paralytic ileus.

Usage in Pregnancy Pregnancy Category C: Animal reproductive studies have not been conducted with PERCOCET. It is also not known whether PERCOCET can cause fetal harm when administered to a pregnant woman or can affect reproductive capacity. PERCOCET should not be given to a pregnant woman unless in the judgment of the physician, the potential benefits outweigh the possible hazards.

Nonteratogenic Effects: Use of narcotics during pregnancy may produce physical dependence in the neonate.

Labor and Delivery: As with all narcotics, administration of PERCOCET (oxycodone and acetaminophen tablets, USP) to the mother shortly before delivery may result in some degree of respiratory depression in the newborn and the mother, especially if higher doses are used Nursing Mothers: It is not known whether PERCOCET is excreted in human milk. Because many drugs are excreted in human milk, caution should be exercised when PERCOCET is administered to a nursing woman.

Pediafric Use: Safety and effectiveness in children have not been established. ADVERSE REACTIONS The most frequently observed adverse reactions include lightheadedness, dizziness, sedation, nausea and vomiting. These effects seem to be more prominent in ambulatory than in nonambulatory patients, and some of these adverse reactions may be alleviated if the patient lies down.

Other adverse reactions include euphoria, dysphoria, constipation, skin rash and pruritus. At higher doses, oxycodone has most of the disadvantages of morphine including respiratory depression.

DRUG ABUSE AND DEPENDENCE PERCOCET (oxycodone and acetaminophen) Tablets are a Schedule II controlled substance.

Oxycodone can produce drug dependence and has the potential for being abused. (See WARNINGS.)

OVERDOSAGE Acetaminophen Signs and Symptoms: In acute acetaminophen overdosage, dose-dependent, potentially fatal hepatic necrosis is the most serious adverse effect. Renal tubular necrosis, hypoglycemic coma and thrombocytopenia may also occur.

In adults, hepatic toxicity has rarely been reported with acute overdoses of less than 10 grams and fatalities with less than 15 grams. Importantly, young children seem to be more resistant than adults to the hepatotoxic effect of an acetaminophen overdose. Despite this, the measures outlined below should be initiated in any adult or child suspected of having ingested an acetaminophen overdose.

Early symptoms following a potentially hepatotoxic overdose may include: nausea, vomiting, diaphoresis and general malaise. Clinical and laboratory evidence of hepatic toxicity may not be apparent until 48 to 72 hours post-ingestion.

Treatment: The stomach should be emptied promptly by lavage or by induction of emesis with syrup of ipecac. Patient's estimates of the quantity of a drug ingested are notoriously unreliable. Therefore, if an acetaminophen overdose is suspected, a serum acetaminophen assay should be obtained as early as possible, but no sooner than four hours following ingestion. Liver function studies should be obtained initially and repeated at 24-hour intervals

The antidote, N-acetyloysteine, should be administered as early as possible, preferably within 16 hours of the overdose ingestion for optimal results, but in any case, within 24 hours. Following recovery, there are no residual, structural, or functional hepatic ab-

Dxycodone Signs and Symptoms: Serious overdosage with oxycodone is characterized by respiratory depression (a decrease in respiratory rate and/or tidal volume, Cheyne-Stokes respiration, cyanosis), extreme somnolence progressing to stupor or coma, skeletal muscle flaccidity, cold and clammy skin, and sometimes bradycardia and hypotension. In severe overdosage, apnea, circulatory collapse, cardiac arrest and death

Treatment: Primary attention should be given to the reestablishment of adequate respiratory exchange through provision of a patent airway and the institution of assisted or controlled ventilation. The narcotic antagonist naloxone hydrochloride (Narcan®) is a specific antidote against respiratory depression which may result from overdosage or unusual sensitivity to narcotics, including oxycodone. Therefore, an appropriate dose of naloxone hydrochloride (usual initial adult dose 0.4 mg to 2 mg) should be administered preferably by the intravenous route, and simultaneously with efforts at respiratory resuscitation (see package insert). Since the duration of action of oxycodone may exceed that of the antagonist, the patient should be kept under continued surveillance and repeated doses of the antagonist should be administered as needed to maintain adequate respiration.

An antagonist should not be administered in the absence of clinically significant respiratory or cardiovascular depression. Oxygen, intravenous fluids, vasopressors and other supportive measures should be employed as indicated.

Gastric emptying may be useful in removing unabsorbed drug.

DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION Dosage should be adjusted according to the severity of the pain and the response of the patient. It may occasionally be necessary to exceed the usual dosage recommended below in cases of more severe pain or in those patients who have become tolerant to the analgesic effect of narcotics. PERCOCET (oxycodone and acetaminophen tablets) is given orally. The usual adult dosage is one tablet every 6 hours as needed for pain.

The Prevalence of Smoking and Its Impact on the Health of North Carolinians

Eugene J. Lengerich, VMD, MS

The health hazards of smoking have been known for 30 years.1 During that time we have significantly advanced the public's knowledge of the dangers of smoking, reduced the prevalence of smoking, and improved the health services available to smokers. Despite these advances, however, cigarette smoking remains the number one preventable cause of death in the United States² and North Carolina.³ In this report I use the most currently available data to describe the prevalence, health impact, and economic costs of smoking in North Carolina. The information should motivate all health care professionals to take an active role in reducing tobacco use in this state.

Methods

Prevalence of smoking. The Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System (BRFSS)⁴ is a weighted, random telephone survey that provides estimates of smoking prevalence among adults 18 years and older in North Carolina. BRFSS has been administered in North Carolina since 1984; data related to particular aspects of smoking are presented for the years available. In 1993, 2,332 residents 18 years and older completed interviews (a response rate of 69%). BRFSS provides reliable estimates of the overall prevalence of smoking among adult residents, but estimates stratified by age, sex, or race may vary from year to year because of the relatively small sample in each stratum-specific group.

The vast majority of smokers in North Carolina are adults, but 90% of smokers begin their habit before they reach 20 years of age. Therefore, preventing adolescents from starting to smoke is crucial if we are to reduce tobacco addiction. In order to estimate the percentage of adolescents who use tobacco, the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction (DPI) has, since 1987, carried out a biennial survey of students in public school grades 7-12. Of the 10,883 students randomly selected in 1991, 10,848 (99.7%) completed the school-based, paper-and-pencil survey.⁵

Impact of smoking. We used the Smoking-Attributable Mortality, Morbidity, and Economic Cost (SAMMEC 2.1) computer program⁶ to generate estimates of the number and percentage of deaths, years of potential life lost, and economic costs attributable to smoking. SAMMEC uses estimates of the prevalence of current and previous smoking (derived from BRFSS) and the relative risks for 27 different diseases to calculate the fraction of each disease attributable to smoking. Specific, smoking-attributable mortality is estimated by multiplying the number of 1992 deaths for each smoking-related disease by the fraction of deaths from that disease attributable to smoking. Disease-specific, smoking-attributable mortality was summed for all diseases to estimate total smoking-attributable mortality. To determine years of potential life lost, smoking-attributable mortality was multiplied by the average number of years (to age 65) of potential life lost per person.

SAMMEC permits the calculation of both direct and indirect smoking-attributable economic costs. Directs costs are those associated with diagnosis and treatment of smoking-related conditions in smokers. To estimate these direct costs, we compared health care utilization rates of smokers with rates for those who had never smoked. This allowed us to estimate the excess rates of smoking-related conditions experienced by smokers. The excess rate of health care utilization by smokers was then multiplied by the average cost of North Carolina health care associated with these diseases.⁷

Smoking-attributable indirect costs consist of forfeited future wages and the costs of housekeeping assistance necessitated by premature death or disability resulting from a smoking-related condition. In this analysis, forfeited wages were discounted at 4% per year to reflect today's value of future earnings; they reflect age-

Results

Prevalence of smoking. The prevalence of smoking in North Carolina has decreased minimally during the past eight years, from 27% in 1986 to 25% in 1993, with estimates for 1990 and 1991 lying outside this range (Table 1, above). During each of the eight years examined, the prevalence of smoking was greater among men than women. Persons over 65 years old have consistently had the lowest percentage of reported smokers; persons 25-34, 35-44, or 45-54 years of age have had the highest. Since 1990, only the 65 or older age group has shown a consistent decrease in percentage of smokers.

In 1993, 1.3 million (25%) adult North Carolinians were current smokers, and 69% of them said that they would like to quit smoking. Approximately 1.2 million (23%) adult North Carolinians were ex-smokers who had successfully quit smoking in their lifetime, 18% of them within the past year. During each year from 1991 to 1993, slightly more than 50% of all smokers quit smoking for at least one day during the prior 12 months (Table 2). Of smokers 18-24 years of age, 70.8% reported quitting for at least one day during 1993. The percentage of male smokers quitting for at least one day increased each year from 1991 to 1993.

Reported lifetime use of cigarettes among students in grades 7-12 reached its highest level in 1989 (57%). However, the rate in 1987 (50%) was lower than the rate in 1991 (56%). In 1991, 22.6% of students had smoked cigarettes within the past 30 days and 7% reported daily use of cigarettes (Fig. 1, at right). More than 3% of students in grades 7-8 reported daily use of cigarettes, compared to 8% in grades 9-10 and 10% in grades 11-12. Less than three-quarters of students (73%) thought that risk of harm to their health was a very important reason not to use tobacco.

Impact of smoking. In 1992, 59,512 North Carolina residents died. Of these deaths, 11,698—one in every five—were attributable to smoking (Table 3, page 12). Men accounted for 70% of smoking attributable deaths. Even though the percentages of site-specific cancer deaths attributable to smoking were generally greater than the percentages of attributable cardiovascular deaths, there were more smoking-attributable cardiovascular disease deaths (n=5,007) than cancer deaths (n=4,278). Of the 434 infant deaths (at less than one year of age), 70 (16%) were attributable to maternal smoking during pregnancy, primarily due to short gestation and low birth weight.

The excess mortality induced by smoking results in a large number of years of potential life lost because the average smoking-attributable death occurred at age 62 years. Assuming a life expectancy of 65 years, 39,320 years of potential life were lost due to smoking in 1992; 28,374 years (72%) among males and 10,946 (28%) among females. The causes of death that forfeit the most years of potential life were ischemic heart disease (10,543 years; 27%) and lung cancer (9,972 years; 25%). Smoking-attributable deaths of infants accounted for 11% (4,436 years) of the potential years of life lost.

During 1992, the economic costs of smoking-attributable mortality and morbidity in North Carolina totaled $2.1 billion, or $310 for each resident. This economic cost included $450 million (22%) in direct costs of health care for smoking-related illnesses. Of the direct costs, $310 million were spent for hospitalization and $57 million for physician's fees. The remainder of the directs costs were allocated to nursing home care, medications, and other professional services.

Indirect costs totaled $1.7 billion in 1992. This represents forfeited earnings and housekeeping expenses associated with the 2.1 million days of work-loss and disability experienced by smokers because of smoking-related illnesses.

Discussion

The human and economic costs of smoking in North Carolina are immense. During 1992, 11,698 deaths and $2.1 billion of avoidable costs were attributable to smoking. One out of every five deaths in North Carolina was attributable to smoking cigarettes, including the deaths of 70 infants. This means that about 32 North Carolinians die from smoking each day, or one every 45 minutes. The economic burden of death and disability caused by smoking costs each man, woman, and child of North Carolina more than $300 every year.

These estimates are staggering, yet probably conservative. We did not include deaths and costs due to environmental tobacco smoke. Environmental tobacco smoke causes 3,000 cases of lung cancer in the US each year as well as bronchitis, pneumonia, asthma, and middle ear effusions among infants and children.8 In addition, the prevalence of smoking was greater before 1992,1 and the effects of that smoking are still being felt. Had we used higher prevalences in our calculations, the estimated impact of smoking during 1992 would be even greater. Previous studies have shown that SAMMEC tends to underestimate both the number of smoking-attributable deaths and the economic costs of smoking.9

There is, unfortunately, no indication that the impact from smoking will lessen in the near future. The prevalence of smoking among adults has not declined appreciably in North Carolina since 1986, and regular smoking by adolescents and young adults (18-24 years old) has increased or remained steady. Even though it is illegal to sell cigarettes to minors in North Carolina (see related articles, pages 59, 64), Cummings and coworkers estimated that 78,000 North Carolinians aged 12-18 years buy approximately 4.5 million packs of cigarettes each year.10 Unless these smokers break this addictive habit, they will contribute to the smoking-attributable costs of the 21st century. We must both prevent experimentation with tobacco and develop mechanisms to identify users and encourage quitting.

The picture is not uniformly grim. More than half of adult smokers and more than two-thirds of smokers aged 18-24 in North Carolina quit for at least one day during the past year. The percentage of young adult smokers quitting for at least one day appears to be increasing.

Many health care providers in North Carolina work diligently to prevent the initiation or facilitate the cessation of smoking. In fact, 99% of primary care physicians in North Carolina believe they have a responsibility to help patients quit smoking. However, only 51% routinely counsel their patients who smoke and only 22% use a method developed and shown effective by the National Cancer Institute. Clearly, most of the state's primary care physicians could take a more active role in reducing the impact of smoking.11 Health care providers can reduce the impact of smoking if they appreciate the magnitude of the problem this addiction poses for the health of North Carolinians. An unequivocal message must be delivered to patients, communities, and policy makers: Smoking is the number one preventable and actual12 cause of death in the US and North Carolina.

For at least 40 years medical scientists have publicized the fact that cigarette smoking damages the health of the smoker. During the past 10 years researchers have documented the health effects of environmental tobacco smoke (ETS) on nonsmokers. This research led the Environmental Protection Agency to publish its December 1992, report stating that ETS is a human carcinogen, responsible for the lung cancer deaths of more than 3,000 nonsmokers each year.¹

In 1986, a survey of North Carolinians found that 80% wanted smoking "banned or controlled in public places."2 From 1989 to 1993, several North Carolina communities passed regulations designed to protect citizens from exposure to ETS. In response to such regulation, the tobacco industry sought, and finally obtained, "preemption" legislation—a law that prevents local communities from passing regulations more stringent than the state law. And the preemptive law passed by the North Carolina General Assembly in 1993 contains no health measures to protect the public from ETS exposure.3

In this paper we discuss the history of ETS regulations in North Carolina, including the preemption bill and subsequent response to it by county commissioners, city councils and Boards of Health. The lessons learned from such experiences may help physicians and other

Regulation of ETS

As early as 1986, public sentiment in North Carolina favored restricting exposure to ETS, but it was not until 1989 that Greensboro enacted the first significant smoke-free legislation. GASP (Greensboro to Alleviate Smoking Pollution), a local tobacco control advocacy group, with help from the local medical society, solicited 12,000 signatures to force a referendum vote in the November 1989, election. Despite the presence in Greensboro of Lorillard Tobacco Company and its 2,500 employees, the measure passed by 173 votes and went into effect January 1, 1990.4 Soon thereafter, the New Hanover County Commission and the City of Wilmington, strongly supported by the chair of the local health department, enacted their own smoke-free indoor air regulations.5

The strength of local support for such initiatives was proven when, in 1991, Lorillard spent a reported $1 million on a petition to have Greensboro's smoking control measure repealed. In the second public referendum, voters upheld the smoking regulations by a margin of over 2 to 1.6

In 1991, the tobacco industry began a campaign for preemption legislation to undo the success of local initiatives. A bill totally unrelated to tobacco but designed to help community colleges ("An Act to Increase the State Effort to Provide Remediation") passed in the State House. It was assigned to a Senate committee but, near midnight at the end of the session, a substitute bill was introduced that deleted all provisions of the original bill and replaced them with a bill on smoking. The substitute bill, retitled "An Act to Regulate Smoking in Public Places and to Prohibit Employment Discrimination Based on the Use of Tobacco Products," had been written by a volunteer lobbyist for the community college system who was also a lobbyist for the tobacco industry. It would have preempted all local ordinances restricting smoking in public places or worksites. Because the new bill violated Senate rules that amendments be germane to the subject of the original bill. it was ruled out of order and never passed.7

From 1991 until 1993, tobacco control advocates directed their activities toward passage of local clean air regulations. Raleigh and Chapel Hill passed regulations in July and August of 1991, followed by Union, McDowell, Cumberland, and Currituck counties. By April 1993, five of North Carolina's 100 counties and many cities had passed some sort of smoking regulation.

Passage of HB957

On April 15, 1993, Reps. Mickey Michaux of Durham and Toby Fitch of Wilson introduced House Bill (HB) 957, "An Act to Regulate Smoking in Public Places and to Establish Standards for Local Governments Electing to Regulate Smoking."

Their public rationale for HB957 was that an increase in local ETS regulations had made it difficult for smokers to enjoy their "right" to smoke and that inconsistencies in local regulations confused "North Carolina citizens, who could be in one city where smoking was allowed, and yet in a neighboring city, it might not." No research or public testimony was offered to support either argument. From the outset the bill bore the stamp of the tobacco industry and was clearly preemptive since it stipulated that "[a]ny local ordinance, law, or rule that regulates smoking adopted on or after July 1, 1993, shall not contain restrictions regulating smoking which exceed those established in this Article."8-11

Despite its title the bill's provisions thwarted the goals of public health. It mandated that at least 25% of space in state-controlled buildings be allocated for smokers. It suggested the use of ventilation systems to minimize smoke, but did not require modifications that would cost money, thereby precluding most. There was no requirement to establish smokefree areas in public places, and most importantly, the bill's implementation date allowed local authorities virtually no time to enact additional regulations before losing their authority to do so indefinitely.

Four days after the introduction of HB957, Rep. Marie Colton of Asheville introduced another bill to regulate smoking in public places. Entitled "An Act to Prohibit Smoking in Public Indoor Areas Except in Designated Smoking Areas," HB1058 proposed to prohibit smoking in public areas (schools, health facilities, government buildings, elevators, public transportation vehicles, arenas). It did not restrict cities or counties from adopting even more stringent smoking regulations.¹² The bill was submitted to the House Committee on Courts and Justice where it "died" for lack of support.¹³

HB957 was assigned to the Judiciary Committee chaired by Michaux. On May 5, 1993, public health officials and others opposed to the bill attended a committee meeting at which the bill was supposed to be publicly discussed. The group left when the official agenda for the day was changed and did not include HB957. Nevertheless, the bill was discussed and voted on that day, and reported favorably to the House. Two amendments were proposed (and defeated) during discussion on the House floor. Rep. Paul Luebke of Durham asked that the deadline for implementation be changed from July 1, 1993 to October 1, 1993. His amendment failed 52 to 55. Rep. Colton attempted to amend HB957 by substituting the entire text of HB1058, her non-preemptive smoking control bill. This effort failed by a margin of 53 to 58. Is

The impetus to extend the deadline for implementation had come from Durham where the county commissioners, City Council, and Board of Health had been working on a smoking control ordinance for months. Had HB957 passed as originally written, they would have been unable to act by the July 1 deadline. In response to their lobbying efforts with Rep. Michaux, on May 12, an amendment passed that extended the implementation deadline for HB957 to October 1, 1993.17 That same day, the bill passed its third required reading (by a vote of 80 to 33) in the House and was sent to the Senate for approval.14

The quick passage of HB957 through the House prevented effective countermeasures by public health advocates, but when it arrived in the Senate, tobacco control advocacy groups were prepared. The Tri-Agency Coalition (American Heart Association, American Lung Association, and American Cancer Society) headed the efforts by issuing periodic "Action Alert" bulletins and by lobbying state legislators.18 They coordinated the testimony of public health leaders and citizens at committee hearings on June 23 and July 6, 1993. The bill received no favorable public testimony, but largely because of the influence of Sen. Sandy Sands of Reidsville, the Senate Judiciary Committee adopted HB95714 and placed it on the Senate calendar. Amendments from the Senate floor extended the implementation date from October 1 to October 15 and decreased from 25% to 20% the area in public buildings to be set aside for smoking.19,20 Editorials opposing the bill appeared in the state's three largest daily newspapers: "Few laws are written with utter clarity. But tobacco advocates, in an attempt to create a right to pollute the public air, have designed this one for maximum muddle."22" Lawmakers should kill [the bill] and bury it in an unmarked grave. This is legislation the public hasn't asked for and doesn't need."23" [It is]...an ill-conceived measure that ought to go into the nearest ash can."24 Despite strong media sentiment against the bill, HB957 passed the Senate by a vote of 24 to 15 and, on July 17, 1993, became law.²¹

Response to Preemption

During the three months of legislative debate on HB957, three North Carolina counties passed regulations on smoking in public places. Then, on June 23, a sentinel event occurred. The Wake County Board of Health became the first agency of its kind in North Carolina to enact a smoking ban intended to "protect and promote the public health and welfare by regulating smoking in public places, eating establishments, and places of employment to minimize the public's exposure to ETS."25 The regulations, far more comprehensive than any previously seen in the state, prohibited smoking in most public places, including restaurants and worksites. At the same time, the NC Association of Local Health Directors assumed a leading role by informing local health directors about HB957, the health effects of ETS, and the opportunities for local Boards of Health to pass their own ordinances.26 These initiatives helped the Durham County Board of Health pass regulations three days before HB957 was ratified.27 Interestingly, not a word of protest was heard at the public hearing in Durham, home of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Company; the regulations passed unanimously.28

The North Carolina Medical Society, which had not actively lobbied against HB957 while it was in debate, assumed a leadership role after its passage. At the urging of the Society's Tobacco Control Task Force and Cancer committees, the president of the Society sent a letter to all local health directors, chairs of local Boards of Health, and presidents and executives of all county medical societies, encouraging them to "take immediate action to urge the adoption of local restrictions on smoking in public places."²⁹ The letter stressed the need for immediate action and included a copy of the Wake County rules as an example.

Similar information was distributed by the Tri-Agency Council and by the president of the Association of NC Boards of Health.³⁰ The NC League of Municipalities wrote all mayors, county commissions, and local governments urging them to act. Several articles and editorials in North Carolina's largest newspaper, the Raleigh News and Observer, condemned the bill and called for action by county agencies.³¹

By October 15, 1993, 50 North Carolina counties had adopted smoking regulations. Eleven required 100% smoke-free space or separate ventilation by the year 2000 (Fig. 1, 2, at right). 32,33 Before HB957, only 16 communities had smoking regulations; by the time it was implemented, 27 Boards of Health, 21 county commissioners and 41 city councils had passed 89 regulations. 33 Interestingly, the likelihood that a county would pass a smoke-free ordinance was significantly and inversely related to the county's economic dependence on tobacco (Fig. 3, next page).

The tobacco industry noticed the effects of the bill. An R.J. Reynolds spokesman said, "I don't think there is much question that the legislation started a clock ticking on the smoking issue in North Carolina. What it did was force some people to look at the issue who might not have looked at it otherwise."³⁴

Each community that confronted the issue had to face unique obstacles. Some were successful, others were not. For instance, after the passage of HB957, a committee of the Randolph County Board of Health, which had not previously considered the issue (Fig. 2), found much public support for a smoking control rule. Unfortunately, the county commissioners did not support the initial recommendations to make 75% of space in restaurants and 100% of space in government-owned buildings smoke-free. Consequently, the Board of Health was forced to lessen the restrictions to 50% of space in both restaurants and government-owned buildings.36

In Onslow County, Board of Health officials developed a strong smoking ordinance covering both restaurants and worksites. Health Director Danny Jacob said, "HB957 started the pot boiling. We felt that our oath and commitment to public health required that we act."³⁷ A public hearing generated debate between community professionals, farmers, and businesspeople. The issue was so controversial that, at the final vote, two Board of Health members who had promised support backed down at the last minute and voted against it. The regulation passed anyway, 7 to 4.³⁷

In Brunswick County, the Board of Health considered regulations similar to those passed in Wake County. Intense public hearings showed the community to be evenly divided on the issue, with strong convictions on both sides. The measure failed by a vote of 5 to 4. Ironically, the vote was decided when a doctor abstained because he found the issue too controversial.³⁶

Controversy followed the passage of county-wide restrictions. The Boards of Health of Wake, Halifax, Guilford, and Buncombe counties were sued by constituents, in some cases linked to the tobacco industry. ^{39,40} The lawsuits challenged the authority of Boards of Health to pass tobacco control regulations. The Guilford County Board of Health was sued by Lorillard Tobacco Company, the local restaurant association, the Tourism Development Authority and Visitors Bureau, and a few local restaurants.⁴⁰ Most Guilford County commissioners opposed the Board of Health regulation, and so the commission refused to provide legal resources to the Board of Health. Ultimately, two retiring members of the Board of Health were replaced by individuals antipathetic to the issue.⁴¹ The new board suspended the smoking rules, and the health director of Guilford County resigned in February 1994.

Another lawsuit was brought against the Wake County Board of Health by 13 local restaurants represented by a law firm that had past ties to the tobacco industry.³⁹ The lawsuit alleged that the defendants had not complied with a requirement to post notices, that the rules would negatively affect business and, once again, that Boards of Health did not have the authority to pass such legislation.⁴² The suit has not been decided.

Boards of Health throughout the state asserted their perceived authority to protect the public health. Their position was supported by several legal professionals. Jeff Koeze, a lawyer at the Institute of Government at UNC-Chapel Hill, wrote that "North Carolina General Statute 130A-39 gives local Boards of Health the power to make rules designed to protect and promote the public's health."43 Dr. Paul Williams, president of the Association of NC Boards of Health, added that the EPA's designation of environmental tobacco smoke as a human carcinogen clearly made smoking a public health issue, subject to regulation by Boards of Health. A state deputy attorney general said that not only do Boards of Health have the authority to regulate smoking, but that their regulations would supersede rules passed by county commissioners.44 The outcomes of three of these lawsuits is uncertain; one in Buncombe County was dismissed. The North Carolina Medical Society has agreed to file amicus curiae briefs, if necessary, on behalf of the Boards of Health.

Victory or Failure?

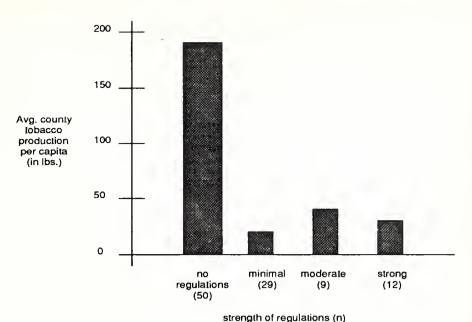

Fig 3: Relationship between the impact of tobacco per county and the stringency of smoke-free regulations in NC counties as of October 15, 1993. Sources: US Dept. of Agriculture, National Agricultural Statistics Service, 1990, and Conlisk et al.³²

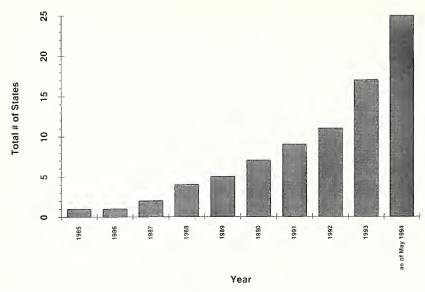

The passage of HB957, despite opposition from many public health leaders, local communities, the media, and citizens, was a clear victory for the tobacco industry in North Carolina. The industry has increasingly relied on such legislation to counter local ETS initiatives across the country. Florida was the first in 1985. and now 25 states have passed tobaccorelated preemption laws (Fig. 4, next page). Even the three-month delay in implementation of HB957 had important ramifications. One-half of all counties considered and passed local ETS measures before the bill's implementation date, but a recent analysis shows that few of the measures offer substantial protection from ETS exposure.32 So, from a public health viewpoint, the final outcome of HB957 must be considered a success for the tobacco industry.

Preemption laws typically offer citizens little protection from ETS. The NC law is particularly egregious because it provides no measures to protect the public from ETS exposure, yet requires communities wishing to regulate such exposure to provide indoor smoking places. Since the rationale in favor of HB957 had no scientific basis, it appears that North Carolina's public policy regarding ETS has been influenced more by politics than by public health.

From a public health policy perspective, however, many positive events did occur. For the first time in North Carolina history, a diverse statewide coalition mobilized to influence tobacco-related legislation. The NC Associations of Boards of Health, local health directors. the Medical Society, the League of Municipalities, the Tri-Agency, and North Carolina Project ASSIST (American Stop Smoking Intervention Study) educated the public and media about the detrimental health effects of ETS and the true nature of the preemption bill. One state senator said, "I had more calls against this bill than any other I can remember," and the final Senate vote was closer than many had predicted. Despite our legislature's tradition of unequivocal support for tobacco, preemption bill supporters couched the measure as a way "to restrict smoking" rather than simply to help the tobacco industry.

Local communities, health directors and officials across North Carolina courageously sought enactment of local ETS regulations. Their successes will empower public health advocates in the effort to reduce tobacco use and ETS exposure. Moreover, HB957 itself still allows communities to prohibit ETS exposure in Flg 4: Total number of states with tobacco-related preemption legislation. Source: Coalition on Smoking or Health, Washington, DC.

80% of indoor spaces. And the law does not apply to private businesses in North Carolina, many of whom are already moving toward a smoke-free environment.

A fundamental issue is the role of Boards of Health in setting public health regulations. Board of Health members are appointed, not elected, in order to ensure unbiased, politically neutral decisions on issues of public health. In North Carolina, Boards of Health already commonly oversee sanitation, workplace safety, control of animals, and control of communicable diseases. Protecting the public from ETS clearly falls within the bounds of such authority, and the exercise of that authority offers a new and powerful mechanism by which communities can seek protection from the dangers of ETS. Boards of Health, able to act with speed and without political ambivalence, may be particularly helpful in tobacco-producing states like North Carolina. However, they are not immune to political processes. For instance, in Davie County, the Board of County Commissioners, displeased with a smoking regulation passed by the Board of Health, dropped a supporter of the measure from the Health Board and replaced her with an employee of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company.⁴⁵

Conclusions

Important questions remain. For instance, will the authority of Boards of Health be upheld in court? If not, much of North Carolina's progress toward clean indoor air may be lost. In addition, do Boards of Health have the capacity to obtain needed legal defense when they are challenged in court? In North Carolina, county commissioners provide the sole financial resource for the Boards of Health. In one county, the commissioners chose to finance legal representation; in another they did not. Given the seemingly limitless resources of the tobacco industry, the fate of such regulations may ultimately be decided by whether the protectors of health get financial support.

Two recently enacted federal laws have implications for North Carolina citizens, public health agencies, and policy makers. The Synar Amendment, passed in 1992, puts states at risk of losing substantial Mental Health Block Grant funds unless they enact and enforce laws preventing minors from buying tobacco products. 46 If communities enact strong rules limiting youths' access to tobacco, they will have a good case for vigorously opposing any efforts at preemption.

A second federal law, Goals 2000: Pro-Children Act of 1994, mandates that all schools receiving federal support eliminate smoking from school grounds.⁴⁷ However, current North Carolina law (HB957) states that 20% of spaces in state-funded buildings must be set aside for smokers, an apparent contradiction of federal law. Ironically, federal law, being stronger than the state's law, will effectively preempt part of North Carolina's preemption law. School officials and parents, by complying with federal law, will protect schoolchildren and non-smoking staff from ETS exposure.

It was concern over ETS that drove communities across North Carolina to enact local policies to protect their citizens from ETS exposure. The agenda of the tobacco industry and others who supported HB957 in the State Legislature clearly did not place public health as a priority. In the future, it is likely that the Occupational Safety and Health Administration will issue a nationwide mandate for smoke-free work environments, thus removing many barriers enacted by HB957's passage. Until then, public health advocates must continue to educate North Carolina's citizens and policy makers about the hazards of ETS as well as effective ways to decrease ETS exposure.

The Role of Organized Medicine and the American Medical Association in Tobacco Control

Thomas P. Houston, MD

More than 400,000 die prematurely in America each year from the combined effects of active smoking and exposure to environmental tobacco smoke (ETS). Smoking is the major cause of lung cancer, of deaths from emphysema and chronic bronchitis, and is a principal cause of heart disease and stroke. About one-half of smokers die from a tobacco-related illness or condition¹—almost 25% of the total deaths in the US.

The decision to assume the enormous risks of smoking is not usually one made by informed adults. Nearly 90% of new smokers are under the legal age for purchase of tobacco products. Three thousand children begin regular smoking daily. Children discount the medical risks of smoking, overestimate their ability to quit, and believe that smoking is much more the norm among adults and their peers than is really the case.

Prevention and control of tobacco use is one of the key issues in the American Medical Association's 1994-1996 strategic corporate plan. The AMA has developed nearly 100 policy statements on various aspects of tobacco and health. They range from affirmations of medical risk and the addictive nature of nicotine to positions on tobacco advertising, divestment of tobacco stock holdings by medical societies and medical schools, and legal approaches to tobacco policy issues. This range of policy has allowed the AMA wide scope in its efforts to reduce the morbidity, mortality, and excess economic burden of tobacco (see Appendix, page 22).

Unfortunately, recent federal hearings about nicotine addiction, the dangers of environmental tobacco smoke, and increased tobacco taxes have been more show than substance. The discussions focused public attention on tobacco and the problems it causes, but have led to no substantial policy changes. Most tobacco control activity in recent years has been at the state and local level, which means that state medical societies can play a crucial role in tobacco control. North Carolina is one of a very few states that have developed tobacco control subcommittees within the structure of the state society. Thus it has a base from which to coordinate efforts in this area.

The former commissioner of the Federal Trade Commission, Michael Pertschuck, has outlined four elements of tobacco control that are essential if we are to free future generations from the ravages of tobacco use. They are: 1) increased excise taxes, 2) limitation of youth access to tobacco, 3) protection from the hazards of ETS, and 4) control of tobacco advertising and promotion. To those "four horsemen" of tobacco control, I have added a fifth—personal and organizational responsibility. I will briefly discuss these strategies.

Tobacco Excise Taxes

Since the landmark Surgeon General's report in 1964, taxes on tobacco, adjusted for inflation, have dropped about 28%. The percentage of the retail price of tobacco attributed to taxes has dropped from about 50% to 25% (Fig. 1, at right). Since 1964 tobacco industry profits have risen considerably because of frequent, substantial raises in the wholesale prices of cigarettes. In recent years, tobacco price increases have risen at about three to four times the rate of inflation, or about 12% per year.³

Especially among youth, tobacco pricing makes a difference in consumption and can be a potent force in saving lives.

Dr. Houston is Director, Department of Preventive Medicine and Public Health, American Medical Association, 515 N. State St., Chicago, IL 60610.

A 10% increase in price leads to about a 4% drop in smoking. The AMA and other voluntary health agencies estimate that a $1 increase in the federal excise tax on tobacco would eventually save one million lives. The AMA strongly advocates increased taxes on tobacco products as a way to reduce the number of teen smokers. The tax revenues generated should be earmarked for health education, health care, and other economic costs incurred by tobacco use, and to help tobacco farmers establish alternative crop programs.

Youth Access to Tobacco⁴

In 1988, children in the US purchased 947 million packs of cigarettes, providing more than $220 million in profit to to-bacco companies. The illegal sales of tobacco to minors, although generating only about 3% of total industry profit, are a source of intense controversy. The National Cancer Institute estimates that at current teen smoking rates, five million American children will die prematurely from having begun to smoke.

In many states, the tobacco industry has supported or engineered legislation that cripples enforcement of laws that could keep children from purchasing tobacco (see articles on pages 14, 59). The industry opposes licensing tobacco vendors; wants to bar local authorities from enforcement power; wants to fine only those who "knowingly" sell tobacco to children; wants to outlaw public health research and investigative reporting about illegal sales; and wants to make the child-purchaser, not the merchant-seller, responsible for the illegal act. State medical societies, by lobbying and by testimony from members, should vigorously support legislation that will truly keep tobacco from being sold to children. We must be vigilant for tobacco industry amendments that strip such bills of their ability to make a difference in youth access to tobacco.

Environmental Tobacco Smoke

In January 1993, the US Environmental Protection Agency released its report entitled "Respiratory Health Effects of Passive Smoking: Lung Cancer and Other Disorders." This has stirred considerable discussion and interest in tobacco and health. The EPA concluded 1) that ETS causes lung cancer in non-smoking adults and should be classified as a known human carcinogen responsible for approximately 3,000 excess deaths yearly; 2) that ETS increases the risk of acute lower respiratory infections, middle ear effusions, asthma, and respiratory irritation in children exposed in the home; and 3) that ETS is implicated as a cause of sudden infant death. Other studies indicate that ETS causes as many as 35,000-40,000 premature deaths annually from cardiovascular disease. Reviews of the health effects of ETS by the US Surgeon General, the National Research Council, the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health, the American Heart Association, and the AMA5 support these conclusions.

It is clear that ETS-related morbidity and mortality are a significant public health threat. ETS exposure demands attention from the health community as well as government agencies involved with health protection. Since laws that restrict smoking in public places and businesses reduce consumption, the tobacco industry will fight them to protect its profits. Protecting the public from the health threat of ETS is critical. Physicians and medical societies should be publicly involved in local and state activities to control ETS exposure. They should participate in public hearings on the subject, write letters to the editor and elected representatives, and educate patients about its hazards.

Advertising and Promotion

The tobacco industry spent about $4 billion in 1993 advertising and promoting its products. Changes in brands selected by adolescent smokers since 1989 reflect advertising expenditure shifts. Camel (13.3% of youth market) and Newport (12.7%) cigarettes have increased at the expense of Marlboro (60%). Overall, 85% of youth purchases are for these three brands—the most highly advertised in the US. Promotion of the race car circuit, clothing and utilitarian items with brand logos, and distribution of free samples have increased dramatically in recent years. State fairs and other venues favored by youth are favorite outlets for industry promotional activity. Monitoring such activities and countering them with pro-health messages can be very useful strategies for organized medicine.

The "Fifth Horseman"—Personal and Organizational Involvement

Why should physicians become involved? Because no single thing kills as many of our patients as tobacco use. No other consumer product to which our children are exposed addicts and kills them when used as intended by the manufacturer. What should we do?

There are a variety of ways to become involved in tobacco control. Local and state medical societies and "ordinary" physicians in practice or hospital can exert enormous power concerning tobacco and health. Testimony from the health community at city council hearings on youth access or ETS protection can refute the propaganda and scare tactics of the tobacco industry. The media are a very useful way to reach the public—most newspapers welcome editorials and letters on tobacco control issues from physicians and medical societies.

Changing the social norms of tobacco use by means of policy actions such as the "four horsemen" will accelerate the decline in tobacco consumption. Physicians and their society representatives, especially in the South, wear the mantle of respect and authority. They must be willing to take the leadership role in fighting a problem described by Dr. C. Everett Koop as "the nation's number one public health problem."

The Tobacco Control Task Force of the North Carolina Medical Society

Georjean Stoodt, MD, MPH, and Clare J. Sanchez, MD, FACP

In November 1991, the North Carolina Medical Society's House of Delegates approved the concept of a Tobacco Control Task Force. In response to this resolution, Past President Dr. John Dees appointed, and in 1993, Immediate Past President Dr. Elizabeth Kanof reappointed, a Tobacco Control Task Force "to develop and recommend policies designed to help make North Carolina a smoke-free society by the year 2000."

More than 11,000 North Carolinians die from tobacco use each year: one out of every five deaths! Tobacco production may be a longstanding feature of North Carolina's cultural and economic heritage, but tobacco has wrought a tragedy of epidemic proportions. Clearly, tobacco use is a matter on which physicians must be neither silent nor ineffectual. We have a professional and moral obligation to "tell it like it really is," to acknowledge and proclaim that the current state of affairs is unacceptable, and to work diligently to eliminate the terrible burden of tobacco use.

The responsibility of physicians to advocate for tobacco control is set out in the Constitution of the Medical Society: "...to elevate the standards of medical education and service;...and to inform the public with such regard for the problems of medical care and public health, that the profession can become more capable within itself, and more useful in the prevention and cure of disease, and in prolonging and adding comfort to life."

As clinicians, we must improve our effectiveness in helping individual patients and their families to quit using tobacco and to prevent children from starting. And because of our unique appreciation of and ability to modify the social and market influences on tobacco and health, we must act individually and collectively beyond the confines of the clinic. We must facilitate and advocate for needed policy change in private organizations, in corporate settings, and in government. We must insist that "tobacco-free" be the norm in all physical, cultural, and social environments; that in those environments healthy options are the "accepted, expected, easy, and more inviting" choices and policies. Finally, we must ensure that our own actions are congruent with our ethical policies.

During the past year the Tobacco Control Task Force has addressed several areas, including:

- Public policy, especially preventing youth access to tobacco; support for clean indoor air legislation and regulation at local, state and national levels; and death certificate coding of tobacco use as a cause of death.
- Physician education and awareness, especially training of medical students in tobacco control; training of practicing physicians to teach smoking cessation skills to others; and publication of articles on tobacco use and prevention in the North Carolina Medical Society Bulletin and the North Carolina Medical Journal.
- Collaboration with organizations in developing or supporting tobacco control events and initiatives such as Project ASSIST, the "Go for Atmosphere" campaign (a public education and awareness effort supporting clean air in public dining facilities), and the "Tobacco-Free Youth: Empowering a Generation for Healthier Communities" conference.
- Contributing to Medical Society policy on tobacco by sponsoring or supporting a number of resolutions regarding tobacco control.

The Task Force has made an important beginning, but much work remains to be done. With a public health problem like tobacco use, sustained leadership and commitment of the Medical Society is needed. Collaboration with other concerned organizations (the American Cancer Society, American Heart Association, American Lung Association, and Project ASSIST) must continue, but there are activities for which the Medical Society is uniquely suited.

The Society needs a standing body with a long-term commitment to its mission: "to develop, recommend, and support policies and activities designed to help make North Carolina a tobacco free society." The Tobacco Control Task Force has two priority goals:

 Develop an informed and activated NC Medical Society and NC Medical Society Alliance membership.

Dr. Stoodt is Chair of the Tobacco Control Task Force and is with the Division of Adult Health Promotion, NC Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources, P.O. Box 27687, Raleigh 27611-7687. Dr. Sanchez is a member and former Chair of the Task Force and is with the UNC Department of Medicine, Chapel Hill 27599.

- Increase public and policy maker awareness of the need and options for a tobacco-free society. Seven activities will be emphasized to achieve these goals:
- 1) Train physicians and medical students in smoking cessation counseling and tobacco control activities.
- 2) Develop ethical standards about tobacco for physicians.
- 3) Advocate Medical Society positions on tobacco issues by lobbying and related Medical Society activities.
- 4) Organize a policy conference on how to make North Carolina a tobacco-free society.
- 5) Promote media advocacy that will publicize Medical Society policy statements, and develop a letter-to-the-editor (letters for leaders) campaign.

- 6) Disseminate tobacco control strategy information and resources for use in offices, waiting rooms, and the community.
- 7) Sponsor recognition awards for tobacco control advocacy at the Society's annual meeting.

It is our hope and commitment that the leadership and coordinated efforts of the North Carolina Medical Society and other concerned organizations will indeed bring about a tobacco-free North Carolina. We would be pleased to hear from physicians or others who would like to help.

Appendix. Tobacco Control Policies of the North Carolina Medical Society, 1985-1993

Smoking and "Smokeless" Tobacco: RESOLVED, That the NCMS oppose the use of tobacco and products and continuously bring to the public information as to the harmful effects of tobacco; and be it further RESOLVED, That the NCMS seek and support legislation that will restrict advertising of "smokeless" tobacco.

Protect Youth from Tobacco: RESOLVED, That the NCMS support the education programs for youth, focusing on the addiction potential and the health risks associated with tobacco use; support a media campaign to increase public awareness of state law which makes it a misdemeanor to sell tobacco to minors under the age of 18, with special emphasis on merchants and over-the-counter vendors of tobacco, and support the ban of cigarette vending machines in locations where minors have access.

NCMS Committee on Tobecco Control: RESOLVED, That the NCMS form a committee (or other appropriate entity) on tobacco control and that the charge of such group include the recommendation of all policies designed to help make North Carolina a smoke-free society by the year 2000.

Youth Access to Tobacco: RESOLVED, That the NCMS request the North Carolina General Assembly to change North Carolina law to effectively prohibit the sale of tobacco products to persons under 18; and be it further RESOLVED, That the word "knowingly" be removed from the present state law concerning selling cigarettes to minors; and be it further RESOLVED, That language be included in the law which states: "No retailer shall sell or permit to be sold cigarettes or other tobacco products to an individual without requesting and examining identification establishing the purchaser's age as 18 years or greater unless the seller has some other conclusive basis for determining the buyer's age.

Tobacco Excise Tax: RESOLVED, That the NCMS support an increase in the state excise tax on tobacco products.

RESOLVED, That the NCMS support and seek to have introduced legislation requiring an increase in the North Carolina tobacco excise tax to a minimum of $1, and if the non-tax part of the price is increased, that the tax should increase proportionally, and be it further RESOLVED, That 30% of the revenue generated from any increase in the North Carolina tobacco excise tax be earmarked for public tobacco control and prevention programs, and 70% of the revenue be earmarked to assist tobacco farmers and those dependent on tobacco income, who wish to divest from tobacco production, to find alternative crops or vocations.

Investments in Tobacco Manufacturing Industry: RE-SOLVED, That the NCMS refrain from any investments in the tobacco manufacturing industry.

Federal Support to the Tobacco Industry: RESOLVED, That the NCMS adopt by reference the AMA's policy 490.989, which states "The AMA opposes federal support to the tobacco industry and urges Congress to end such support," and be it further RESOLVED, That the NCMS encourage our Congressional delegation to redirect the cost savings of ending such support into efforts that provide tobacco farmers with incentives and/or opportunities for pursuing alternative sources of income.

Worker Exposure to Environmental Tobacco Smoke (ETS): RESOLVED, That the best method for controlling worker exposure to environmental tobacco smoke is to eliminate tobacco use from the workplace and to implement a smoking cessation program; and be it further RESOLVED, That the NCMS request that the AMA immediately petition the Occupational Health and Safety Administration to develop regulations that eliminate occupational exposure to environmental tobacco smoke.

Legal Brief for Right of Board of Health to Rule on ETS: RESOLVED, That the NCMS commends the Guilford County Board of Health (GCBOH) and other local Boards of Health for acting promptly in face of the deadline imposed by the General Assembly and enacting rules to control environmental tobacco smoke; and be it further RESOLVED, That the NCMS have legal counsel investigate the legality of such rules and if it is concluded to be within the legal authority of such boards, file a brief as a friend of the court, supporting the GCBOH's actions in passing these regulations; and be it further RESOLVED, That the NCMS lobby to repeal the provisions of House Bill 957 that prohibit local governments from enacting ordinances that are more restrictive than those established by state law at appropriate future sessions of the General Assembly.

Support for Project ASSIST: RESOLVED, That the NCMS endorses the American Stop Smoking Intervention Study (Project ASSIST) strategic plan entitled "Communities in Action" and pledges support of its members to its successful implementation.

An Interview with Dr. Alan Blum

Tobacco Industry Nemesis

Editor's note: Guest Editor Dr. Adam Goldstein conducted this interview with Dr. Blum in October 1994. Dr. Blum is Associate Professor of Family Medicine at Baylor College of Medicine, Houston, Texas, and founder of Doctors Ought to Care, an international health promotion organization. Contact DOC at 5510 Greenbriar, Houston, TX 77005, 713/798-7748.

Dr. Goldstein: When and why did you become involved with tobacco issues?

Dr. Blum: I was raised in New York City, where my father was a general practitioner. He also was an avid fan of the Brooklyn Dodgers. When baseball games began to be regularly televised in the mid-'50s my father was outraged that the Dodgers' pregame show—Happy Felton's Knothole Gang—featured kids in various batting, fielding, and throwing contests against the background of a billboard advertising Lucky Strikes. At the time, nearly all the major and minor league teams had cigarette sponsors. My father understood that the association of sports and cigarettes was ridiculous, because athletic prowess was the opposite of what smoking would provide for you. When I became editor of my high school newspaper in 1964, my father handed me copy of the Surgeon General's report on smoking and health. That led to my first editorial about smoking.

The first Surgeon General to speak out against smoking was Dr. Leroy Burney in 1957. He did so in the absence of widespread support from the medical community. The AMA had only recently stopped accepting cigarette advertisements in its journal and still permitted tobacco companies to mount promotional displays at its annual scientific assembly (a practice that continued at some state medical societies until the 1980s).

Instead of endorsing the newly released Surgeon General's report of 1964, the AMA accepted $10 million from six tobacco companies to sponsor additional research on tobacco and health over several years. The AMA finally published its own document on smoking in 1978, which confirmed the Surgeon General's findings 14 years earlier.

Dr. Goldstein: What is the appropriate role of physicians and other health care professionals interested in countering the ill effects of tobacco on society?

Dr. Blum: In 1964 53 million people in the US smoked. In 1994, 53 million Americans still smoke. Many older people have stopped smoking on the advice of their physicians, but our success rate with adolescents has not improved. In fact, we now have the youngest ever cohort of people who smoke.

The role of physicians should be to help reduce demand for this stuff to begin with, not just support resolutions at medical meetings that urge anti-tobacco legislation. Doctors need to be visible and outspoken in their communities. For the most part, this is not happening.

Physicians should wear their white coats when they take on the legislature but shed them when they talk to kids. They need to realize that the real role models kids obey may not be parents, teachers, or doctors, but people in cigarette and alcohol ads, which appear where teens congregate.

Dr. Goldstein: Physicians themselves used to have very high smoking rates, yet very few doctors smoke today.

Dr. Blum: The original research that alarmed doctors and the public alike was that of Hill and Doll in the 1950s. Their research focused on the high rate of lung cancer among doctors who smoked, and at that time two-thirds of American physicians smoked. When the studies began appearing, to-bacco companies responded with medically oriented advertising slogans like "More doctors smoke Camels than any other cigarette," and "Leading nose and throat specialists suggest...change to Philip Morris." The companies began promoting filtered brands, which in reality offered no health benefit whatsoever. One of the most widely touted filters was made out of asbestos! Also, after the Surgeon General's 1964 report, tobacco companies allayed public anxiety by creating low-tar cigarettes, which also offer no health advantages.

Dr. Goldstein: The tobacco industry spends more than $4 billion a year in advertising and promotion. The federal tobacco control budget is about $50 million a year. What can the medical community do?

Dr. Blum: We need to do a better job of involving people from the business community, especially those who understand money. Once they tote up the health care costs, they will discover that in spite of all the tobacco industry rhetoric about jobs, taxes, and tobacco's contribution to the economy, the death, disease, and disability toll caused by tobacco consumption works against a healthy economy—unless you count hospitals, firefighters, physicians, and funeral directors as financial beneficiaries of the smoking pandemic.

Dr. Goldstein: What about tobacco farmers?

Dr. Blum: Tobacco farmers are very hard-working people who have raised a crop that was important for generations. Unfortunately they may end up like railroad conductors, who were displaced with the advent of airplane travel. Tobacco now causes more than 430,000 premature deaths a year in the US alone. Tobacco farmers need to understand that it is no longer a noble tradition to raise tobacco. Cigarette manufacturers recognize this by importing more (and cheaper) tobacco and building dozens of manufacturing facilities abroad. I want to assist tobacco farmers in diversifying their crops. Cigarette manufacturers want to keep American tobacco farmers beholden to them, even as they prepare to rely less and less on American-grown tobacco.

Dr. Goldstein: Where do you think tobacco, the tobacco industry, and health professionals will be in the year 2000?

Dr. Blum: Health advocates are just beginning to get off the ground. In the past, public and private health organizations have never really focused on reducing demand for tobacco. They have been too reluctant and penurious to buy space in the mass media for anti-smoking ads. Unlike advertisers, they don't understood the best ways to motivate kids.

No, the health community has been too busy studying tobacco-related pathology and epidemiology, which is even worse than we thought. I hope that by the year 2000 we will better know how to combat and ostracize the tobacco industry. It wouldn't surprise me if some of today's tobacco industry executives go to jail; they clearly know that promoting cigarettes to young people is treasonous to a decent society.

Dr. Goldstein: What can physicians in North Carolina do?

Dr. Blum: Physicians from tobacco-growing states like North Carolina can play a key role. If they speak up and call for a winding down of this industry, then they can help foreshorten this epidemic and garner tremendous international esteem.

YOCON YOHIMBINE HCI

Description: Yohimbine is a 3a-15a-20B-17a-hydroxy Yohimbine-16a-car-boxylic acid methyl ester. The alkaloid is found in Rubaceae and related trees. Also in Rauwolfia Serpentina (L) Benth. Yohimbine is an indolalkylamine alkaloid with chemical similarity to reserpine. It is a crystalline powder, odorless. Each compressed tablet contains (1/12 gr.) 5.4 mg of Yohimbine Hydrochloride.

Action: Yohimbine blocks presynaptic alpha-2 adrenergic receptors. Its action on peripheral blood vessels resembles that of reserpine, though it is weaker and of short duration. Yohimbine's peripheral autonomic nervous system effect is to increase parasympathetic (cholinergic) and decrease sympathetic (adrenergic) activity. It is to be noted that in male sexual performance, erection is linked to cholinergic activity and to alpha-2 adrenergic blockade which may theoretically result in increased penile inflow, decreased penile outflow or both.

Yohimbine exerts a stimulating action on the mood and may increase anxiety. Such actions have not been adequately studied or related to dosage although they appear to require high doses of the drug. Yohimbine has a mild anti-diuretic action, probably via stimulation of hypothalmic centers and release of posterior pituitary hormone.

Reportedly, Yohimbine exerts no significant influence on cardiac stimulation and other effects mediated by B-adrenergic receptors, its effect on blood pressure, if any, would be to lower it, however no adequate studies are at hand to quantitate this effect in terms of Yohimbine dosage.

Indications: Yocon[§] is indicated as a sympathicolytic and mydriatric. It may have activity as an aphrodisiac.

Contraindications: Renal diseases, and patient's sensitive to the drug. In view of the limited and inadequate information at hand, no precise tabulation can be offered of additional contraindications.

Warning: Generally, this drug is not proposed for use in females and certainly must not be used during pregnancy. Neither is this drug proposed for use in pediatric, geriatric or cardio-renal patients with gastric or duodenal ulcer history. Nor should it be used in conjunction with mood-modifying drugs such as antidepressants, or in psychiatric patients in general.

Adverse Reactions: Yohimbine readily penetrates the (CNS) and produces a complex pattern of responses in lower doses than required to produce peripheral a-adrenergic blockade. These include, anti-diuresis, a general picture of central excitation including elevation of blood pressure and heart rate, increased motor activity, irritability and tremor. Sweating, nausea and vomiting are common after parenteral administration of the drug. 1.2 Also dizziness, headache, skin flushing reported when used orally. 1.3

Dosage and Administration: Experimental dosage reported in treatment of erectile impotence. 1.3.4 1 tablet (5.4 mg) 3 times a day, to adult males taken orally. Occasional side effects reported with this dosage are nausea, dizziness or nervousness. In the event of side effects dosage to be reduced to ½ tablet 3 times a day, followed by gradual increases to 1 tablet 3 times a day. Reported therapy not more than 10 weeks. 3

How Supplied: Oral tablets of Yocon* 1/12 gr. 5.4 mg in bottles of 100's NDC 53159-001-01 and 1000's NDC 53159-001-10.

How Important is Tobacco in NC?

Facts Belie Public Perception

Thomas O'Connor, MPH

Tobacco has played an important role in the history and culture of North Carolina. Tobacco money financed some of the state's finest academic and health care institutions, as tobacco industry supporters are quick to point out. The enormously profitable "golden leaf" propelled thousands of dirt-poor farmers, particularly in eastern North Carolina, into the middle class. Many North Carolinians, including some state political leaders, feel a strong emotional tie to tobacco, remembering how it put food on the table.

Today, the tobacco industry is under intense scrutiny. Years of anti-smoking campaigns have caused a steady decline (until recently) in the proportion of Americans who smoke. Many states have increased tobacco excise taxes and President Clinton actually proposed to fund health care reform, in part, through a 75-cent per pack increase in the federal cigarette excise tax. Most states and many municipalities have public smoking restrictions (see related article on page 14). The Environmental Protection Agency, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, Congressional committees, the Food and Drug Administration, and the Attorney General have all taken or considered actions that are detrimental to tobacco industry interests.

Recently, too, the fortunes of tobacco farmers and tobacco industry workers have declined. This has led to the notion that confrontation with the tobacco industry, restrictions on public smoking, and health advocacy campaigns have caused the economic decline in the state's tobacco industry. Supporters of tobacco allege that "anti-smoking hysteria" threatens the survival of farmers and workers and the entire North Carolina economy. Agricultural Commissioner James Graham said that "tobacco continues to face perilous times. Over the past few years, health concerns, increased taxes, and smoking bans in many public and private facilities have resulted in domestic consumption going down 2%-3% per year." Industry supporters and health activists both paint the picture of a dying industry, whose demise is guaranteed by the declining ranks of American smokers.

At the time of this writing, Mr. O'Connor was employed by the UNC Department of Family Medicine, CB# 7595, Chapel Hill 27599-7595. This work was supported in part by a grant from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation.

It is true that anti-smoking education, restrictions on public smoking, and new social norms have changed Americans' smoking behavior, yet these changes are not the primary reason that the fortunes of North Carolina's tobacco farmers and industry workers have declined. A large and expanding international market has made cigarette manufacturing a very profitable industry. American cigarette manufacturiers buy vast quantities of tobacco, produce enormous numbers of cigarettes, and reap huge profits. What has changed is that more imported tobacco is used to produce American cigarettes in place of domestically grown tobacco. What has changed is that intense price competition has mandated both lower production costs and streamlined, highly automated production processes, which require fewer workers.

Despite the claims of tobacco industry supporters, these changes have not led, nor are they likely to lead, to economic misfortune in the state. North Carolina's recent economic growth patterns show that the state's economy is increasingly less dependent on tobacco revenue, and yet has one of the healthiest growth rates in the country.

The Un-Importance of Tobacco in NC

Today North Carolina relies on a diversified, modern economy. Far more jobs are found in the manufacture of electronic equipment and chemicals, in education, and in other major industry categories, than in tobacco (Fig. I, at right). Only 1.1% of North Carolina workers are employed in tobacco farming, processing, and manufacturing jobs combined. Another 20,000 to 40,000 tobacco allotment holders (about 1% of the state's employed population) receive some income by leasing their allotments. Thus, the proportion of the state's residents who benefit directly from the tobacco economy is very small relative to health care and the state's other major industries (Fig. 1). The importance of tobacco to the state's agricultural economy has declined dramatically, down from nearly 60% of total farm income in 1950 to 20.3% (Fig. 2, above right).

Despite these figures, tobacco's role in the economy remains significant. Tobacco is extremely profitable because a small number of workers can produce a great deal of value. Table 1 shows the estimated dollar value of the major sectors of the state's tobacco economy in 1993. The combined value attributable to each of the sectors is equivalent to approximately 7.8% of the state's 1993 gross state product. This sum is substantial, but it is far less than what it once was (in 1963 it was 11.3%) and far lower than what many North Carolina residents perceive. A recent survey asked North Carolina legislators to estimate the proportion of the state's economy represented by the tobacco industry. The median estimate was 20%, with responses ranging as high as 75%. This overinflated sense of tobacco's importance leads legislators and residents alike to exaggerate the interests of tobacco farmers and manufacturers.

My analysis may underestimate the true importance of tobacco in the state's economy because supplying industries—such as farm equipment and paper products—depend on its revenue. The "multiplier effect" for tobacco in North Carolina is estimated to be approximately 2.05.4 That is, for every dollar directly produced by the tobacco industry in the state, another $1.05 in economic activity is generated by the supply of goods and services to the industry. One should not conclude, however, that 16% of the state's economy depends on tobacco. Analysts point out⁵ that if revenue were removed from tobacco, economic activity would not disappear, but be redirected. If tobacco farmers replaced tobacco with other crops, economic activity would be generated through suppliers of equipment and materials for those crops. Such a transition would not be painless, of course, particularly in farm counties that depend heavily on tobacco income. Those counties would likely experience at least a temporary net loss of income if tobacco farming declined drastically. To get some sense of the potential economic effects of a significant decline in tobacco production in the state, we need to take a look at the state's past experience.

Table 1. Contribution of the tobacco industry to the NC economy, 19934

Total Gross State Product Proportion ascribed to tobacco industry	$149 billion 7.8%

Liberation From Economic Bondage to Tobacco

North Carolina has become decreasingly dependent on tobacco. As Fig. 3 indicates (next page), tobacco production and acreage have declined precipitously since the late 1970s. During 1959-1963, North Carolina produced an average of 864 million pounds of tobacco per year. During 1989-1993 the figure was 606 million pounds per year, a fall of 29.9%. Acreage planted in tobacco decreased during the same period by 42.5%.6 These declines are expected to continue. The number of tobacco manufacturing and processing workers in the state fell by 28% from 28,784 in 1970 to 20,801 in 1992.7

North Carolina tobacco farmers correctly point out that no other crop has so consistently generated high levels of profit. Nevertheless, many farmers have, in fact, successfully diversified. The state's agricultural economy is the third-most diversified in the US, according to the NC Department of Agriculture's deputy commissioner.⁸ This is demonstrated by the many farmers who have moved into profitable livestock operations. The state's broiler chicken industry grew at 6% annually during the 1980s. The hog industry has expanded dramatically in the eastern counties where tobacco was once predominant. The total number of hogs produced increased by 46% from 1985 to 1992,⁹ reversing the relative importance of tobacco and livestock in the state during the past 40 years. Livestock, dairy, and eggs now account for 54% of farm income, compared to tobacco's 20.3%.¹⁰

Despite the diminishing tobacco industry, the state's economy has shown robust growth. From 1977 (the first year for which data are available) to 1990, the Gross State Product increased from $80.5 billion to $123.8 billion in constant dollars, an increase of 4.1% per year. Thus, the fear that the state's economy will be shattered by a continuing decline in the tobacco industry is disproved by the state's own experience.

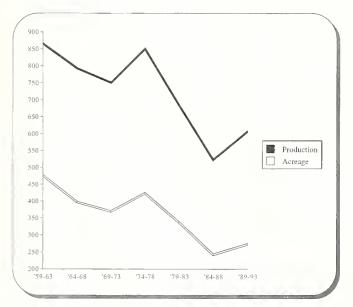

Changing International Markets and the US Tobacco Economy

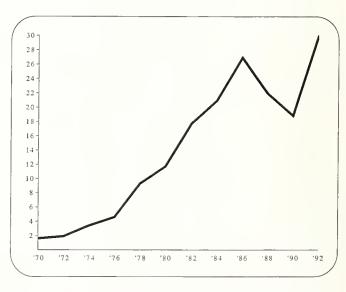

The smaller numbers of Americans who smoke is only one factor affecting North Carolina's tobacco farmers. Another is that the composition of US cigarette sales has changed dramatically in recent years. A recessionary economy introduced intense price competition and resulted in increased demand for discount-priced cigarettes. Discount cigarettes accounted for a negligible proportion of the market until the mid-1980s, then grabbed 15% of the market by 1989, and skyrocketed to 36.8% by 1993. Not only are there fewer smokers, but those who do smoke have less disposable income and seek a lower-priced product. As a result, US cigarette manufacturers have purchased lower-priced, foreign-grown leaf instead of premiumquality, premium-priced domestic leaf. The depressed demand for US leaf has meant lower production quotas and lower earnings for North Carolina tobacco farmers.

The market profile of the consumers of American cigarettes has also changed dramatically. The number of US smokers has declined, but consumption of American cigarettes has increased steadily overseas where total sales of American-blend cigarettes increased 4.6% from 1988-1993.¹³ A large proportion of these "new" consumers have relatively lower incomes, thus requiring American companies to sell lower-priced cigarettes. This further increases the demand for foreign over domestic leaf.

US cigarette manufacturers are clearly using more imported tobacco for their products. Imports of flue-cured and burley tobacco combined rose from nine million pounds (0.8% of all tobacco used) in 1969 to 217.3 million pounds (30.1% of all tobacco used) in 1992 (Fig. 4, below right). This steep rise in tobacco imports precipitated a backlash of protectionism among Congressional representatives from tobacco-growing states. There is even a provision in the 1993 federal budget bill requiring that cigarettes produced by US manufacturers must contain at least 75% US-grown tobacco. Passage of this provision brought immediate protests from US trading partners and is currently under review for compliance with the General

Flg 3 (left): Tobacco production and acreage, NC, five-year averages, 1959-1993. Flg 4 (rlght): Imports of tobacco as a percentage of total tobacco used by US manufacturers. 35

Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Another factor in the international market has been increased tobacco production by several major tobacco-producing countries. Brazil surpassed the US in flue-cured tobacco production in 1993, and Zimbabwe's crop increased by 9%. The US burley crop decreased by 11% in 1993; Brazil's increased by 43%. Tobacco can be produced for as little as $3 per kilo in Brazil, China, Malawi, and Zimbabwe, compared to $7 per kilo in the US. Increased production has lowered leaf prices in the international market.

Changes in the cigarette market have also affected tobacco industry workers. Price competition requires producers to lower costs; technological developments enable fewer workers to produce more cigarettes. Philip Morris, for example, has developed highly automated manufacturing technology for its plant in Cabarrus County. The new plant produces 66 million cigarettes per worker annually; its older plant in Richmond, Virginia, produces only 26 million. 17 The company plans to reduce its workforce in the less-efficient plant by 900 workers in the near future. 18 Overall, Philip Morris plans to cut 14,000 jobs, or 8% of its workforce, according to a late-1993 company announcement. It blamed "more efficient manufacturing methods" for the loss of jobs. 18 In a similar vein, Brown and Williamson recently announced plans to cut 700 jobs (13% of its workforce), 19 and RJ Reynolds cut its workforce by 11% in 1993.20

The Financial Health of the US Tobacco Industry

The tobacco industry remains one of the most profitable industries in the country. Of 53 industry categories analyzed by Standard and Poor, tobacco products ranked eighth in return on sales from 1988-1992. Business Week recently reported that four of the six major US cigarette producers—Philip Morris, RJ Reynolds, Brown and Williamson, and Lorillard—"remain enormously profitable." Other tobacco products have also done well. UST, Inc., parent company of US Tobacco Company, the largest producer of moist snuff, was ranked first in return on assets among Fortune 500's largest industrial US companies in 1993. 23

Last year proved especially "difficult" for cigarette manufacturers because of intense price competition engendered by Philip Morris's successful attempt to protect its Marlboro brand's top position in the market. The six major tobacco producers earned combined operating profits of "only" $5.2 billion in the US alone. The tobacco divisions of the two industry giants, Philip Morris and RJR, posted a combined total profit of more than $7 billion including international sales (Table 2, at right). This combined total represented a substantial decline from 1992, when their profits were $9.9 billion!

The explosive growth in the international cigarette market has obviously been extremely profitable for US manufacturers. Philip Morris estimates that total world sales outside the US in 1993 reached 5 trillion cigarettes.24 This dramatic growth has allowed US tobacco companies to remain highly profitable despite fewer Americans smoking. US tobacco companies have aggressively positioned themselves to take advantage of increased overseas demand for their product. Philip Morris now operates in 180 national and territorial markets worldwide, reporting profitability in 175 of them. The company has sought to take advantage of new markets as well. It recently signed a cooperative agreement with the Chinese National Tobacco Corporation to produce and sell Marlboros in China, projecting "immense opportunities for profitable growth over the longterm." Philip Morris is negotiating with the Vietnam Tobacco Company to manufacture Marlboros.²⁵ In 1993 the company acquired majority interests in government-owned tobacco companies in Lithuania, Russia, and Kazakhstan.26

RJR Tobacco International has been equally aggressive. Its St. Petersburg plant already produces 20 billion cigarettes a year.²⁷ It has established joint ventures in China, Ukraine, and Hungary and has opened plants in Turkey and Poland. RJR has marketing teams working in the Czech Republic, Bulgaria, and Romania.²⁸

Western Europe also continues to be a reliable source of profits for US companies. Sales of American-blend cigarettes in the 23 most economically developed nations other than the US are increasing at the rate of 3% per year.²⁹ US tobacco company profits from international sales have risen along with the increased demand. The combined international profits of RJR and Philip Morris rose an impressive 15.9% in 1993 over 1992.

The outlook for future profitability is excellent. US companies expect to benefit from increasingly open markets in Eastern and Central Europe and the former Soviet Union, which includes all seven of the world's heaviest smoking populations—Poland, Hungary, former Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Czech and Slovak Republics, and Russia. OAs the RJR 1993 annual report states, these countries have a "huge population with a high demand for, and limited availability of quality cigarettes." And China may offer an even greater bonanza for US companies.

The Profit in Smoke

Financial analysts do not appear overly concerned about two developments that may threaten the tobacco industry:

Massive product liability. Paine Webber states "the combination of preemption of damage claims by the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act and the lack of sympathy that jurors have for cigarette smokers, makes plaintiffs' litigation

Table 2. Operating profits of tobacco companies, 1993²³

Domestic	$2.81 billion	$1.2 billion
International	$2.36 billion	$64.4 million
Total	$5.168 billion	$1.844 billion

against cigarette companies an uphill battle."31

Federal excise tax increases. Paine Webber suggests that any tax is likely to be phased in "in palatable chunks over a long period of time" and is not a cause for panic, nor a fundamental threat to the financial well-being of the industry.³¹

Analysts expect tobacco company profits to rebound from their 1993 levels, predicting a 15% profit increase in 1994 at Philip Morris, a 12% rise at RJR, a 15%-20% profit increase at Lorillard and 10% at Brown and Williamson. Merrill Lynch is less enthusiastic about short-term profits but predicts that the industry "will outperform the market over the longer term." Smith Barney suggests that at Philip Morris "the prospects for a regeneration of double-digit earnings and dividend growth are not that far away." Industry analysts interviewed by the industry journal, Tobacco Reporter, agree that "Philip Morris will get back to the profit levels of four or five years ago," and say that RJR and the other leading producers should get close to those levels. Si

But there is little reason to believe that North Carolina's tobacco farmers will share in the prosperity. The USDA reported that the farmers' proportion of the cigarette user's dollar dropped from 7% in 1980 to 3% in 1991; at the same time, manufacturers' share rose from 37% to 50%.³⁴

Restrictions on tobacco imports will produce no significant benefits for US farmers. US cigarettes will include more domestic tobacco, but exports will decline as foreign manufacturers use at home the leaf they previously exported to the US. In addition, retaliatory trade measures will further decrease US tobacco exports. Finally, US cigarette manufacturers may move manufacturing sites abroad if import restrictions are upheld.

Conclusions

This analysis provides important lessons about the present and future role of tobacco in North Carolina. First, tobacco's current importance to the economy is far less than the state's political leaders suggest. Governor Hunt and the state's congressional delegation have repeatedly supported the tobacco industry. Certain state legislators form what one representative termed "a tobacco assembly" that is adamantly opposed to reducing tobacco use. Yet, as the above data indicate, special identification with the tobacco industry's interests is out of proportion with the actual importance of the industry.

Second, barring unforeseen changes in domestic tobacco production (such as dramatically cost-efficient production or new uses for the leaf), tobacco will continue to decline in importance as a source of revenue for state residents. This will occur as a result of international market forces, regardless of the actions of Congress, the FDA, the EPA, citizen activists, or the Tobacco Institute. The decline of tobacco farming is certain, regardless of the "right" of some 75,000 North Carolinians to profit from a product that kills 400,000 Americans annually. The NC economy will adapt to the change, as it has successfully adapted to the loss of thousands of textile manufacturing jobs—more than 20,000 in the past five years—and nearly 10,000 tobacco manufacturing jobs over the past 20 years.³⁵

At the same time, US cigarette manufacturers will continue to earn enormous profits by selling their products to millions of addicted American smokers and hundreds of millions more around the globe. Diversion of some of those inflated profits could help North Carolina's tobacco farmers adapt to the inevitable changes in the state's economy. Tobacco farmers should receive financial incentives, technical support, and loans to convert to new crops or occupations. The North Carolina Medical Society's 1993 proposal to increase the state tobacco excise tax from 5 cents to $1—directing part of the revenue toward assisting tobacco farmers in making this conversion—was a step in the right direction, albeit one for which the state General Assembly is still not ready.

Times are changing for tobacco. North Carolina's political leaders and tobacco farmers cannot afford to ignore them.

Giving Up Smoking

A PERSONAL GUIDE TO BECOMING SMOKE-FREE Adam O. Goldstein, MD

Millions of American have successfully quit smoking and are now "tobacco-free." Your motivation to quit, really wanting to quit, is a key part to your success. There is no magic way or cure to break a tobacco addiction. Some people are able to quit smoking by simply saying so. Many people must make a plan for 1-2 weeks before they set a quit date. Some smokers need a nicotine replacement tool, like nicotine gum or patch, to help them in smoking cessation. The most important message is that you must find the right way for yourself; it often takes many tries. The more often you try to quit, the greater your chances for suc-

Dr. Goldstein is a clinical assistant professor at the University of North Carolina, Dept. of Family Medicine, CB #7595, Chapel Hill 27599-7595.

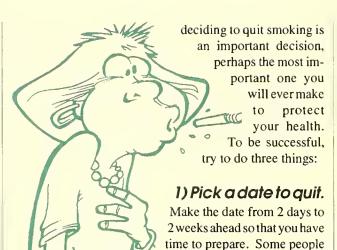

"Why should I quit?"

Most people know that cigarettes are bad for your health, but do you know that: people who smoke have two times the risk of having a heart attack; that almost all cases of lung cancer and chronic lung disease are due to smoking; that your lifespan will be 10-15 years shorter if you smoke; that men who smoke have a higher rate of impotence and that women who smoke will get wrinkles in their face much faster and more often?

Most people who quit smoking notice that they feel much better after only one week. Positive feelings include: better lungs, a stronger heart, and an improved ability to taste and smell food. You will also have more money, lower life insurance costs, and lower medical bills. For instance, if you quit smoking a pack of cigarettes a day when you are 20 years old, putting the same amount of money into a savings account instead, by the time you are 60 years old, you will have saved almost $100,000!

"How can I successfully quit?"

Some people say "quitting smoking is easy. I have done it a 1000 times." However, this way of thinking is wrong because without much thought. As a result, the next day after quitting, they find out that they were not ready. Few people would leave work and go on a 2 week vacation without making detailed plans. On the other hand, few people quit smoking if they put off the decision to smoke for more than a few weeks. This shows they are not really interested. When you make this decision, tell people who care about you about it so that they can help you achieve your goal. Picking this quit date is the first and most important step to take. (see sample quit smoking contract)

2) Plan ahead for ways to handle stress, boredom and other reasons why people say they smoke.

People smoke cigarettes for all kinds of reasons. While some people say they smoke because of stress, it is quite possible that the strain being felt is due to nicotine withdrawal. Think about why you smoke cigarettes and in what situations. Make your own list of why you smoke, and what activities you can do instead of smoking. You must plan ahead. Otherwise, when you face a situation you did not expect, you will not be prepared, and you may respond by doing exactly what you did not want to do - smoke a cigarette. remember, most urges to smoke last only 2 or 3 minutes, and then they go away. You can clearly have a good chance to get control over your health back again.

3) Pick a reward!

Quitting smoking is not easy. By choosing to do so, you have made a major improvement in your life. You should feel good about this choice and reward yourself. For instance, if you smoked 1 pack of cigarettes a day, you spent about $45 a month on cigarettes alone. What will you buy for yourself or a loved one after you have quit for one month. You have $45 to spend. Write down this reward and make a copy of it for a friend. If you are not successful the first time around, give the $45 to a charity to remind you of why you want to quit and to encourage you to try again.

COMMON QUESTIONS:

"Should I ask my doctor for a nicotine patch or gum to help me quit smokina?"

Most people can quit smoking without a prescription from their physician by following the steps above. Some people (10-20% perhaps) will find that their chances to quit smoking are improved by using either nicotine gum or patches. To determine if you truly need such products, ask yourself two simple questions:

- 1) What is the longest period of time you have ever successfully stayed off cigarettes, and
- 2) How soon after you wake up in the morning do you have your first cigarette?

If you cannot go more than a day without a cigarette without feeling like you are going crazy, and if you have your first cigarette almost as soon as you roll out of bed, then you may be highly addicted to nicotine, and you will likely benefit from talking with your doctor about a nicotine replacement products. Using nicotine gum or patches can help, but do not replace, the need to pick a quit date, plan ahead, and set up a reward.

"What if I have a cigarette after quitting?"

Do not be too hard on yourself! Most people 'relapse at least once. The important thing to do is to learn from your mistake. Why did you have the cigarette, under what situation, and what could you do the next time to avoid smoking? You can learn in this way from your mistakes.

It is almost never too late to quit smoking. No matter how long you have smoked, if you quit, you will see benefits. Even if you are 65 or 70 years old, quitting smoking now can help you live a much longer and healthier life.

"Will I gain weight if I quit?"

Gaining weight after quitting smoking can be avoided in most people by careful planning. If you pick activities like walking or running to substitute for smoking, you can avoid putting on much weight. Those who do gain weight often gain only 4-5 lbs, and some people even lose weight after quitting.

"What about other ways to quit smoking?"

Once again, there are no magic bullets. Some people quit smoking by attending smoking cessation classes. Other spend a lot of money on therapies such as hypnosis, acupuncture, auriculotherap, biofeedback and many more. Before you spend a lot of money though, ask the provider of the service what is their success rate? If it is under 10%, it is too low. If it is over 60%, be skeptical, particularly if it requires a lot of money. Ask to talk with 2 other people who have gone through the particular program.

Remember, stopping your use of tobacco products, including smokeless tobacco, is the single greatest thing you can do to protect your health. Ask your doctor how he or she can assist you in achieving this goal!

RESOURCES FOR PHYSICIANS

American Academy of Family Physicians (800) 274-2237

The American Academy of Family Physicians provides physicians with a comprehensive office based smoking cessation program, including handbooks, self-help materials, audiotapes, reminders and more.

American Heart Association (919) 783-7853

American Cancer Society (919) 834-8463

American Lung Association (919) 832-8326

The Heart, Cancer and Lung Associations are excellent resources for local educational materials, usually free of charge or available at a nominal cost. In addition, most counties in the state have component chapters of each organization which offer smoking cessation classes for patients on a regular basis.

American Medical Association (312) 464-5000

The American Medical Association offers a wide variety of smoking cessation resources.

Doctors Ought to Care (713) 798-7729

Doctors Ought to Care (DOC), as a national, physician-based advocacy group dedicated to motivating health professionals to become involved with community-based tobacco prevention strategies, provides materials for countering tobacco advertising, slides for school based tobacco prevention efforts, and resources for innovative office waiting room strategies.

Office on Smoking or Health (404) 488-5701

The Office on Smoking or Health (OSH) is the component of the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) that is responsible for coordinating federal efforts at tobacco control. OSH distributes a wide variety of research and educational materials designed to assist physicians, parents and children in their smoking cessation and prevention efforts.

National Cancer Institute (800) 4-CANCER

The National Cancer Institute produces many smoking cessation materials free of charge for distribution to patients. A manual entitled "How to help your patients stop smoking," and a companion manual for pediatric patients, are available.

North Carolina Division of Adult Health (919) 733-1881

The North Carolina Division of Adult Health has an inventory of tobacco cessation programs available to patients by county throughout North Carolina. In addition, Project AS-SIST (American Stop Smoking Intervention Study) has many materials and training opportunities for physicians desiring improved skills in smoking cessation counseling.

The North Carolina Medical Society continues to promote anti-smoking efforts across the state both financially and with staff support.
Through the proactive stance of its Tobacco Control Task Force, the Society maintains a vigilant public health posture.

A View From the Fields

David G. Altman, PhD

In the beginning, one must walk slowly and carefully. Do not assume that you know the answers or need to force a solution. Remain modest and allow the Unknown to guide you. Do things for their own sake and not in anticipation of results. Attend to the path and not the goal, and all will be well.

--- Ching

I wanted to get closer to the golden leaf. To feel it. To smell it. To pick it. To come face-to-face with the enemy I've been fighting the past decade. To better understand those who grow it. To look for other options.

After hearing of my interests, a friend invited me to her parent's farm, the place where three generations of her family have grown tobacco. As I pondered being a tobacco farmer for the day, I thought about my 10 years of work to prevent young people from using tobacco. These efforts have included both scholarly research and activism. Currently, I am president of Stop Teenage Addiction to Tobacco (STAT), a national prohealth advocacy group that fights industry efforts to addict children. Needless to say, my day in the tobacco fields would be unusual for an activist, indeed, some might think it downright odd. Yet, on a beautiful Saturday morning in September, I embarked on my journey.

The drive from my house to the farm was only 40 miles, but filled with a thousand thoughts—about those who lay dying from smoking-related diseases in the hospitals I passed; about schoolkids on the addiction escalator; about how I would be accepted by tobacco farmers; about learning the skill of picking; about contracting green tobacco disease; about my future as an activist. Was I letting down my guard? It wasn't nervousness, per se, just anxious anticipation. During the ride, I tried to think about what I might learn by day's end. I did not doubt that it would be filled with questions and conflict.

Do not continue to fight or quarrel. It is better to disengage and separate. Perseverance in proper principles brings success in spite of all other influences.

-I China

I drove up the long gravel driveway, past my friend's mother on a tractor pulling a trailer full of tobacco leaves picked by five Mexican laborers. I felt out of place and uncertain about what was about to happen. A flock of butterflies circled my gut. I was an activist in a strange land.

My friend greeted me warmly, and we chatted for a few minutes. As I caught my bearings, I realized that my five senses were on high alert. The peacefulness of the farm, broken only by the sounds of animals, helped me to relax. The sweet fragrance of cured tobacco filled the air. In the distance, I saw a field of unpicked tobacco. The green and yellow leaves, in neat rows, looked innocent, even majestic. Shortly, I would be in that field, stripping leaves and helping load them into curing barns for a week of mellow roasting. Then the leaves would be hauled in large burlap bags to auction and eventually to the millions addicted to nicotine.

My first encounter with tobacco was in the relative safety of a field that had not yet been picked. My friend drove me there on a three-wheeler, from which I was initially hesitant to stray. My friend's two-year-old nephew romped around the tobacco plants, played in the trailer loaded with leaves, and ran around the slowly moving tractor. Like a chick following its parent, I cautiously ventured into the field, and after a few minutes, I was ready to join the Mexican laborers. I began to pick tobacco.

By watching my co-workers and my friend, and by following the hand-signals and nods from my friend's mother on the noisy tractor, I became as proficient as one might expect a white-collar, urban, tobacco activist to be (50% slower than the others). The process involves storing the leaves under your arm until the pile is big enough to put on the trailer. Mine kept falling out. As a result, my piles were substantially smaller than the others', and I made more frequent trips to the trailer. The rhythmic and surprisingly loud sound of leaves being snapped off—pumph, pumph—rang through the air, although maybe I was the only one who heard it.

After several hours of pulling and loading, two trailers were filled to the brim. We broke for lunch at a local café, surrounded by farmers. Again, I felt out of place. Hamburgers and fries were the standard fare. The ambient level of tobacco smoke was even higher than in Winston-Salem restaurants. Signs on the tables said, "Thank You for Smoking." My northern accent, my unweathered skin, my non-smoking status certainly made me stand out. Everywhere I looked, promotional items and advertisements touted tobacco. But the people seemed to accept my presence, although they must have wondered why I was there and what I was doing. Uncomfortable, I made no effort to talk to anyone other than my friend's family. No strangers struck up a conversation with me. Perhaps, we both knew that this would be awkward.

Before my experience in the fields, I knew that tobacco farmers, like tobacco-control activists, were passionate, hardworking individuals concerned about their families and their communities. My first-hand interaction reinforced my belief that farmers and activists stand together on core values. More and more, our perceptions of tobacco companies grow closer. Health professionals believe that tobacco companies stand alone as modern-day merchants of illness. Farmers are increasingly frustrated with the tobacco companies' stingy reward for their hard work (three cents of the tobacco dollar goes to farmers, 60 cents to manufacturers.) Mutual respect and dialogue may eventually replace the wedge between farmers and health professionals put there by tobacco companies.

There are, however, important differences. Farmers see that tobacco pays their bills; health professionals who treat tobacco-induced disease find the price too heavy for the bills it pays. Most farmers don't understand why health professionals interfere with their lives; health professionals don't understand why farmers seem to ignore people who struggle every day to breathe. Health professionals encourage farmers to grow other crops; farmers think they know nothing about the economics of farming.

My friend told me recently that, without her family's tobacco farm, she would have no car or college education. I believe her. And, having been in the fields, I better understand the difficulties that thousands like her will experience when the economic infrastructure of tobacco farming changes. But my friend is a smoker, and I worry about the disease and disability that tobacco may bring her long after the car is junk and her college days forgotten.

I saw the five Mexican laborers, sweaty from their work, beam with excitement as they were paid hard cash for their efforts. They don't worry about how the leaves they pick will reap devastation. To them, tobacco pays the bills, and those of family members living in poverty thousands of miles south. As I picked leaves in the fields, the short- and long-term benefits and costs of tobacco confronted me directly.

In times of struggle, perseverance on the path is everything. To waver from what is correct in thought or action is to risk losing all that you have gained.

—I Ching

I am committed to educating tobacco farmers about the public health importance of tobacco control. I am also committed to learning more about the plight of tobacco farmers and having them educate me about feasible options for tobacco control policy. I believe that tobacco farmers will share their thoughts and feelings with activists if activists will begin the conversation. Both activists and farmers must put aside long-held stereotypes and work toward finding common ground. I believe that our goals and desires overlap, but I don't yet know where or how deep our common interests run. Understanding that will undoubtedly shape my future tobacco-related research and activism.

Dr. Goldstein: What's up with Doctors Ought to Care (DOC)?

Dr. Blum: Since its founding in 1977, DOC members have worked in the clinic, classroom, and community to educate the public about unhealthy products and the major preventable causes of poor health and high medical costs.

DOC uses humor to get kids to laugh at smoking and spitting tobacco, and, in particular, brands teens favor like Marlboros, Camels, Winstons, Kools, Virginia Slims, Red Man, Skoal, and Copenhagen. DOC pioneered the type of counter-advertising that ridicules tobacco companies and their products. I wish every physician would buy an ad in his or her own local newspaper to help start laughing these pushers out of town.

As my father pointed out in the '50s, the link between sports and smoking must be broken. To that end, DOC has sponsored activities such as the Dead Man Chew softball tournament, the Emphysema Slims tennis circuit (with Billie Jean Butthead, Monica Sell-Out, and Martina Nosmokanova), and the Barfboro Barfing Team (instead of the Marlboro Adventure Team). We create these events in association with local communities, medical societies, civic groups, and schools around the country, and we'd love to bring them to North Carolina.

A Commitment to Change. A Commitment to You.

Nicotine Withdrawal Symptoms

A Review for Primary Care Practitioners

Betty E. Cogswell, PhD

Many people have tried to quit smoking but not succeeded, often because they are addicted to nicotine. Nicotine addiction is thought to be due to the interplay of multiple factors that heighten the appeal of smoking. These factors include pharmacological effects, learned or conditioned behaviors, moods, social cues and settings, and socioeconomic factors. During the past three to five years, investigators and clinicians have recognized that nicotine's biological effects reinforce learned smoking behaviors and make them resistant to change. Learned behaviors are conditioned by cues or stimuli inherent in the daily life of smokers. Craving for cigarettes occurs during withdrawal in 80%-90% of smokers, things, activities, and emotions associated with previous smoking than on blood nicotine levels.

Physicians who advise quitting and people who are trying to quit smoking may be unaware of the signs and symptoms of nicotine withdrawal or of the severity and varied duration of each symptom. In this paper I review the scientific literature on nicotine withdrawal and suggest how to help patients stop smoking. I give special attention to studies of nicotine withdrawal symptoms, who experiences withdrawal symptoms (including depression), duration and severity of symptoms, influence of symptoms on relapse, number of quit attempts before succeeding, self-titration of nicotine levels, use of pharmacological aids, and the role of primary care physicians.

Nicotine Withdrawal Symptoms

Most of those who investigate the effects of smoking cessation derive a list of signs and symptoms for study in one of two ways: they accept the diagnostic criteria listed under nicotine withdrawal in the revised edition of the *Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM III-R)*⁵ or they assume that nicotine withdrawal will produce signs and symptoms that are the opposite of the effects of nicotine itself. We have a number of loosely related facts on the effects of nicotine administration and withdrawal but no integration into a cohesive explanatory framework.⁶

DSMIII-R defines a nicotine withdrawal syndrome, which may occur when people abruptly stop or reduce use of tobacco. It usually includes at least four of the following: I) craving for nicotine; 2) irritability, frustration, or anger; 3) anxiety; 4) difficulty concentrating; 5) restlessness; 6) decreased heart rate; or 7) increased appetite or weight gain. In addition, DSM III-R lists associated signs of withdrawal that include: "increased slow rhythms on an EEG, decreased metabolic rate, tremor, increased coughing, REM changes, gastrointestinal disturbances, headaches, insomnia, and impairment of performance on tasks requiring vigilance."

Nicotine is "a powerful pharmacologic agent that changes cardiovascular, neural, endocrine, and skeletal muscle functions;" it produces both behavioral arousal and sympathetic neural activation. Investigators have sometimes defined nicotine withdrawal symptoms as the opposite of known physical and psychological responses to nicotine. Table 1, next page, shows Benowitz's matching of primary to withdrawal effects of nicotine. Benowitz's article also includes two unmatched withdrawal effects—sleep disturbance and craving for nicotine. It also includes these unmatched primary effects: EEG desynchronization; increased circulating levels of vasopressin, growth hormone, ACTH, cortisol, prolactin, and beta-endorphin; increased metabolic rate; lipolysis; increased fatty acids; cutaneous and coronary vasoconstriction; increased blood pressure; and skeletal muscle relaxation.

The broad range of primary effects of nicotine should encourage clinicians to accept as valid the peculiar experiences many people report during nicotine withdrawal. Nicotine enhances the release of neurotransmitters such as acetylcholine, norepinephrine, dopamine, and serotonin. It thus leads to behavioral arousal and sympathetic neural activation. The enhanced release of dopamine and norepinephrine may produce pleasure (and anorexia); acetylcholine may improve performance on behavioral and memory tasks; beta-endorphin may lower anxiety and tension.¹

Who Gets Addicted?

No factors have been found that predict nicotine addiction or distinguish smokers from non-smokers. The prevalence and magnitude of nicotine withdrawal symptoms vary, but at least 75% of people who quit experience at least one symptom and 25%-50% have significant withdrawal symptoms. An estimated 10%-25% of quitters experience no symptoms. An estimated 10%-25% of quitters experience no symptoms.

Shiffman⁹ studied very light smokers whom he called "chippers." Chippers smoke about five cigarettes per day and are able to abstain without experiencing withdrawal symptoms. Chippers probably account for the 5% of smokers who reportedly quit smoking simply because their doctors tell them to do so and provide written education material. Patients who respond to advice and quit without nicotine replacement are mainly light smokers who average fewer than 10 cigarettes per day. But, over time, chippers tend to increase the number of cigarettes they smoke and risk becoming addicted. Physicians should encourage chippers to quit and warm teenagers not to begin. People who try out, or sample, cigarettes become regular users at a far higher rate than people who sample illegal drugs. ¹²

Withdrawal Symptoms and Relapse

One of the first studies¹³ to look prospectively at withdrawal discomfort explored 18 possible determinants. These included demographic characteristics, smoking history, intake of alcohol and caffeine, the Fagerstrom written test of nicotine dependence, and the written Tompkins score on smoking to relieve negative affect and craving for cigarettes. The investigators compared self-reported symptoms, craving for cigarettes, and weight gain before and after quitting. They found only that older smokers and those who had smoked longer had gained weight after six months, and that abstinent smokers who gained more weight were less likely to relapse. Table 2 shows withdrawal symptoms noted during week 1.4

The presence of withdrawal symptoms does predict relapse. ¹⁴ In a study of 227 people attending a smoking cessation clinic, symptoms of abstinence, depression, duration of urges, and difficulty not smoking during week 1 were significantly associated with relapse during week 2. Depression and difficulty not smoking during week 2 predicted relapse during week 3. Withdrawal symptoms in week 3 were not associated with return to smoking in week 4. These findings suggest that fewer patients might relapse if they had professional contact during the first and second week after quitting. Withdrawal symptoms have only modest power to predict relapse, but are better than measures of pre-abstinence smoke intake, number of cigarettes smoked per day, or nicotine dependence measured by a written questionnaire.¹⁴

Treatment of withdrawal symptoms should help patients succeed in quitting, but the symptoms identified in small surveys or experimental studies have not been validated in large populations. Thus, there is little information about the prevalence, severity, or duration of symptoms in the large population of people who try to quit. The issue of symptoms must be explored individually with each patient.

Depression and Nicotine Withdrawal

Depression has been studied less often than other symptoms of nicotine withdrawal, primarily because depression was not listed in DSM III-R.⁵ This should change since the recently published *DSM IV*¹⁵ lists depression first among nicotine withdrawal symptoms. Recent investigators have found a high prevalence of smoking among depressed adults.² In a large community cohort study, Glassman et al¹⁶ found that regular smoking was more frequent among people who at some time in their lives had had a major depressive disorder. And people with a history of major depression were less successful in quitting smoking. The authors warn that individuals with such a history are at risk of developing depressive symptoms and, in some cases, serious major depression when they stop smoking.

To obtain a national perspective on the relationship between depression and smoking, Anda et al¹⁷ analyzed data from a large study conducted in the early 1970s with follow-up in the early 1980s. They found that the prevalence of current smokers increased as depression score increased. Since adolescents were excluded at baseline and since most regular smokers began smoking in their teens, they were unable to assess prospectively the relationship between depression and smoking initiation. Among the cohort of smokers in the follow-up study, depressed smokers were 40% less likely to have quit than non-depressed smokers. These differential quit rates mean the percentage of current smokers who are depressed may now be increased and will further increase in the future.

In a large retrospective study of smokers 21 to 30, Breslau et al4 reported that nicotine dependence was associated with a lifetime history of major depression or anxiety disorder. Greater withdrawal discomfort may be the reason why people with historics of major depression have higher rates of smoking and lower rates of quitting. A recent article analyzed 239 smokers who had tried to quit or cut down on smoking. The patterns of withdrawal during week 1 differed among patients with depression, or anxiety, both, or neither.4 The symptom, "feeling depressed," was reported by 33% of those with major depression, 27% of those with anxiety, 27% of those with both disorders, and 17% of those with neither disorder. These differences did not achieve statistical significance, but the data suggest varying patterns of withdrawal. In any case, even people with no history of major depression or anxiety disorder can experience depression during withdrawal. In addition to nicotine replacement, anti-depressant medication and psychological support may benefit patients who become depressed during withdrawal.

Duration and Severity of Nicotine Withdrawal Symptoms

There is wide individual variation in both the duration and severity of symptoms that follow cessation of smoking. Gritz et al³ prospectively studied 554 subjects who quit without assistance. After 12 months, 35 continuous abstainers had five of the seven symptoms listed in DSM III-R; 20% of the subjects craved cigarettes and were anxious, 10% were irritable or angry, restless, and eating more. However, during week 1 the same five symptoms, especially craving for cigarettes, had affected 55%-90% of these 35 people. Symptoms peaked within a week, after which they declined for three months and then remained reasonably level. These findings suggest that abstainers must be followed for more than a year to learn the full duration of symptoms and also that nicotine-addicted patients may need follow-up and treatment of persistent withdrawal symptoms for a year or longer.

Quit Attempts: Success and Failure

Smokers usually make multiple attempts to quit before they succeed. Fiore et al¹⁸ reported that 66% of people who succeeded in remaining abstinent for at least a year had made one to two previous attempts, 20% had made three to four previous attempts, and 12% had made more than five previous attempts. Practitioners should realize and accept that most patients require multiple attempts to quit smoking before they succeed.

People who succeed and those who fail differ little by sex, race, number of cigarettes smoked per day, and whether or not their physician has advised them to quit. About 90% of successful and 80% of unsuccessful quitters use individual methods rather than organized programs. Smoking cessation is a process of four stages: precontemplation, contemplation, action, and maintenance. Most smokers cycle and recycle through these processes. Prochaska et al²⁰ found that people who are innerdirected are more successful at quitting than those who rely on influences outside of themselves for change. Those who successfully abstained for six months experienced markedly higher levels of self-efficacy, yet those who relapsed had lower levels. By emphasizing inner-directed change and helping patients develop the confidence to quit, practitioners may increase the success of their patients.

Self-Titration of Nicotine Levels Avoids Symptoms

Smokers regulate their smoking behavior to maintain their blood nicotine level. They want to be above a lower limit that would induce withdrawal symptoms and below an upper limit that would produce nicotine toxicity.²²¹ Smokers vary their puffing frequency, puff duration, puff pressure, depth of smoke inhalation, and duration of inhalation to maintain their preferred nicotine level when they smoke fewer cigarettes per day, when they shift to lower nicotine cigarettes, or when their urine is acidified to increase nicotine excretion.²¹⁻²⁴

These findings suggest that "cutting down" before quitting or shifting to lower nicotine cigarettes may help chippers but not those who are addicted to nicotine. Conversely, smokers also change the way they smoke to avoid nicotine toxicity when given high-nicotine cigarettes.²⁴

Pharmacological Aids for Smoking Cessation

For many smokers, pharmacological aids make the transition from nicotine addiction to stable abstinence more tolerable. Jarvik and Henningfield,²⁵ in their excellent review, discussed both nicotine replacement and individualized non-specific pharmacotherapies for treatment of withdrawal symptoms:

Nicotine Replacement Therapy (NRT). "Reduction of nicotine withdrawal symptoms by nicotine replacement...is directly related to the administered nicotine dose...Difficulties concentrating, irritability, and restlessness are each reliably attenuated by nicotine replacement...however the effect on desire to smoke is not as reliable...and appears more subject to environmental factors." 25

Nicotine replacement therapy is no magic bullet; it is one of a growing number of pharmacologic aids that can help patients quit smoking. Increasingly, the physician's role is to determine which pharmacologic tools are most appropriate for a given patient, and to make certain that the patient knows how to use prescribed agents effectively.

Best results are obtained from NRT when it is combined with behavioral change. Physicians are most helpful when they view cigarette smoking as two primary linked problems: physiological (nicotine) and behavioral dependency. Physiological dependency may be understood by considering how self-titration maintains nicotine levels. Behavioral dependency is influenced by psychological and sociological factors as well as individual and cultural values. Practitioners who provide pharmacological treatment should consider how behavioral factors will influence patients' success in quitting. This does not mean that physicians must undertake extensive psychotherapy to treat nicotine dependence effectively, but that a few minutes of advice to stop smoking and the provision of regularly scheduled follow-ups can be effective.²⁶

Nicotine Patch. The nicotine transdermal delivery system (nicotine patch) was introduced in 1992. It is particularly helpful to smokers with high levels of physical dependence and high levels of motivation to quit. Dependent patients exhibit one or more of the following criteria:²⁷ 1) they smoke 20 or more cigarettes a day; 2) they smoke within 30 minutes of arising; and 3) they experience a strong craving for cigarettes during the first week of a quit attempt.

A review of 11 double-blind, placebo-controlled clinical trials demonstrates the effectiveness of the nicotine patch.²⁷ Eight of the 11 studies had at least six months of follow-up. At six weeks, use of nicotine patches resulted in smoking cessation rates that ranged from 33% to 77%, about twice those of placebo-treated subjects. Individuals treated with nicotine patches had six-month abstinence rates of 22% to 44%, yet those treated with placebo patches had abstinence rates of 5% to 28%. Fiore et al²⁷ and Gritz et al³ assume that six to eight weeks of treatment gives ample time for withdrawal symptoms to abate and for ex-smokers to acquire new behavioral skills to maintain abstinence. As noted previously, however, 10% to 20% of abstainers still have symptoms at 12 months.

For patients with high levels of dependence or a history of prolonged physiological withdrawal symptoms, treatment should begin with the highest-dose nicotine patches (21 mg) and be continued at that dose for four to six weeks. Some individuals experience severe withdrawal symptoms when they replace a 21 mg patch with a 14 mg patch, or a 14 mg patch with a 7 mg patch.²⁸ Practitioners should warn patients and help them develop a plan to deal with symptoms in the event they occur.

Longer periods of nicotine replacement have been tried. Russell et al¹¹ used 16 hour-per-day nicotine or placebo patches for 18 weeks in 600 heavy smokers (more than 15 cigarettes per day). Nicotine patches reduced the severity of craving and adverse mood changes during the first weeks of withdrawal and doubled the rate of cessation (after one year 9.3% of the nicotine group was completely abstinent and 3.6% of the placebo group). The nicotine patches used delivered 15 mg, 10 mg, and 5 mg nicotine into the blood stream over 16 hours. The active nicotine group initially received 15 mg patches. If, after week 1 patients were having difficulty remaining abstinent (48% in the nicotine group and 68% in the placebo group), they were asked to use two patches per day through week 12.

From week 13 through 18 the dose of nicotine was tapered every two weeks and then discontinued. Each patient received, in addition to the patch, brief general practitioner advice, a booklet, and follow-up with brief support (provided by doctors or their nurses) at one, three, six, 12, 26, and 52 weeks. Russell concludes that the way to maximize the number of ex-smokers in one's practice is by providing brief advice and support for light smokers, and adding nicotine patches for heavier smokers.

Nicotine Gum. Patches can be used in conjunction with nicotine gum.²⁵ One piece of Nicorette® gum delivers about 1 mg of the 2 mg nicotine contained in a pressure-sensitive resin. The resin minimizes the risk of toxicity since nicotine is released slowly and some chewing is necessary. Nicotine is delivered across the buccal mucosa over about 30 minutes. If necessary, a 4 mg dose can be prescribed or can be approximated by telling patients to use two 2 mg doses at once, holding one piece in each cheek. Permission to use this method gives patients more control over their treatment and permits them to self-titrate their nicotine level.

Blood nicotine levels do not rise as rapidly with gum as with cigarettes. If nicotine gum is the only NRT, it is best taken every hour or two on a schedule. Patients should start by using 10-14 doses of 2 mg gum, spaced out over the day, if they had been smoking 20 cigarettes per day; 14-18 doses for 30 cigarettes; and 18-22 doses for 40 cigarettes. ²⁵ Patients should not use the gum while drinking coffee or cola because an acid saliva impedes nicotine absorption. ²⁹ Robinson provides good advice on how to be sure that patients are using the gum as directed. When used in the context of a formal cessation program, nicotine gum can significantly increase the number of smokers who remain abstinent for one year, especially smokers highly dependent on nicotine. ³¹

Practitioners should note that, when the doctor's advice to stop smoking is unsolicited, the addition of either nicotine gum or placebo adds nothing to the small impact of the admonition.³⁶ The patient must want to quit. Not surprisingly, abstinence rates with nicotine gum are higher when subjects are community volunteers or people attending smoking cessation clinics.32

Pharmacotherapy of Symptoms. Certain drugs can help treat withdrawal symptoms. The situational use of an anxiolytic such as a benzodiazepine or buspirone can help some anxious individuals. Jarvik and Henningfield²⁵ suggest the use of serotonin reuptake inhibitors such as fluoxetine when depression is a prominent symptom. People with a history of depression can be started on medication and adjusted to full antidepressant dosage several weeks prior to their quit date. They can use nicotine replacement with the antidepressant, and if they remain abstinent, the antidepressant should be continued for several months. If weight gain seriously interferes with patients' resolve to quit, an anorectant such as fenfluramine may help. Practitioners should counsel quitting patients to eat a high fiber, low-fat diet and to maintain or begin an exercise program.

In a small, double-blind, placebo-controlled smoking cessation trial, Pomerleau et al³³ studied whether 60 mg/day of fluoxetine could prevent weight gain. Their analysis focused on subjects who had achieved a stringent reduction in nicotine intake and who had attended pre- and a post-nicotine reduction lunch sessions 70 days apart. People on placebo gained significantly more weight (+3.3 kg) than subjects on fluoxetine (-0.6 kg). The authors concluded that fluoxetine effectively prevented the weight gain that accompanies reduced nicotine intake, in part because it diminished calorie intake.

Questions About Nicotine Withdrawal

Prospective studies have not adequately ascertained the prevalence and severity of withdrawal symptoms in the general population of smokers, the time pattern and duration of withdrawal symptoms, whether or not there is a prolonged abstinence syndrome, why smokers vary widely in the severity of withdrawal symptoms, or the specific effects of withdrawal on relapse.¹² In 1991, Hughes et al¹² attributed our lack of knowledge to three factors: 1) Most studies are based on the 5% to 10% of smokers who attend smoking cessation programs at clinics or in the community. These smokers appear to be more dependent on nicotine than self-quitters. 2) Most prospective studies use relatively small samples. Large samples would be better for the study of withdrawal effects not only because a sizeable proportion of people will relapse, but also because large samples would permit comparison of differences among abstainers. 3) Most studies are of short duration. Prospective studies rarely examine withdrawal beyond the first weeks of abstinence, and retrospective studies are compromised by the limitations of memory.

In addition, to these three, two other factors are operative.

1) Large national surveys seldom include questions about the array of withdrawal symptoms reported in the literature. 2) Large surveys rarely follow a single cohort, so questions about the sequence and duration of symptoms over time have not been adequately answered. These shortcomings mean that practitioners have few alternatives by which to learn about withdrawal symptoms except through clinical experience. This is not as serious a disadvantage as it might be since each patient's treatment should be individualized.

Role of Primary Care Physician

Nearly half of all adults who have ever smoked have quit. Smoking prevalence has fallen dramatically, from 40% in 1965 to 26% in 1991. Still, more than 50 million Americans continue to smoke or use oral snuff or chewing tobacco. Despite the magnitude of the epidemic, tobacco users do not universally receive professional advice or treatment to help them overcome their addiction. Every primary care practitioner must help if we are to achieve the Healthy People 2000³⁵ objectives of reducing the prevalence of adult cigarette smoking to no more than 15%, and of ensuring that at least 75% of health care providers routinely advise cessation and provide assistance and follow-up to all of their tobacco-using patients.

Primary care practitioners need to recognize and to treat nicotine addiction as a primary problem in its own right, not just as a risk factor for other diseases. This means translating the enormous scientific and clinical advances of the 1980s and early 1990s into practical action plans.³⁵ A large survey of smokers who had seen a physician during the previous year found that only 44% had ever been told to quit smoking by the physician.³⁶

Practitioners can get detailed information on how to provide psychological and social and pharmacological support, and how to change patients' smoking behavior from Nicotine Addiction: Principles and Management,³⁴ and Nicotine Psychopharmacology.³⁷ Both of these texts, and many other scholars, emphasize that nicotine withdrawal varies greatly from person to person—in intensity, duration, and in specific signs and symptoms. The community resources available on referral include stop-smoking classes, stress control, hypnosis, and acupuncture.

Conclusions

In 1990, the program director for smoking research at the National Cancer Institute said that "the primary message for physicians is that their advice is a key element in motivating smokers to make a quit attempt." The role of physicians is changing because of the advent of nicotine replacement therapies and the laboratory, clinical, and community research demonstrating that nicotine replacement reduces withdrawal symptoms. Now one of the major jobs of practitioners is to determine which of their smoking patients need medication and which medications they need. A growing knowledge of the individual variations in withdrawal symptoms among whose who quit should help practitioners improve their smoking cessation efforts.

Nicotine as a Therapeutic Drug

Eric C. Westman, MD, Edward D. Levin, PhD, and Jed E. Rose, PhD

The bad effects of tobacco are well known to readers of this Journal.¹ Less well known is the fact that tobacco was used by Western medicine for centuries in attempts to ameliorate illness.² Tobacco was prescribed for many different symptoms and in many different forms, including smoking, chewing, skin plasters, and enemas.³ Today, we know that the long-term risks of tobacco-related diseases⁴ far outweigh any short-term benefits.

Nicotine itself is not harmless and has clear addictive potential, but now that nicotine may be administered directly, as with a nicotine patch, the risks associated with delivery have decreased.⁵ For several specific diseases the benefits may now outweigh the risks.^{6,7} In this paper we review the possible therapeutic uses of nicotine in three medical conditions: ulcerative colitis and Parkinson's and Alzheimer's diseases. Articles for review were identified through a Medline search.

Nicotine and Ulcerative Colitis

For many years, ulcerative colitis was observed to affect non-smokers more than smokers. In addition, many cases of ulcerative colitis had their onset in former smokers a few years after they stopped smoking. The negative association of ulcerative colitis and smoking has been documented in 10 case control studies. A meta-analysis of nine of these studies found that the combined odds ratio of smokers vs. non-smokers developing ulcerative colitis was 0.41 (95% CI: 0.34 - 0.48). Since publication of the meta-analysis, another study has confirmed the negative association of ulcerative colitis and smoking, finding an odds ratio for smokers vs. non-smokers of 0.13 (95% CI: 0.05 - 0.38). The reason for the negative association is not known, but these studies have led to the hypothesis that nicotine might improve the clinical course of ulcerative colitis.

The therapeutic value of nicotine in ulcerative colitis has been assessed in several small, experimental studies and one short-term, randomized, doubleblind, placebo-controlled trial (Table 1).10-¹² In the randomized controlled trial, nicotine patches were tested against placebo patches in 72 non-smoking patients who had at least one proctoscopically confirmed relapse of ulcerative colitis. Patches were used for six weeks, with a dose at the end of the first week of 15 mg nicotine/24 hours, subsequently increased to 25 mg nicotine/24 hours as tolerated. After six weeks, the nicotine patch had significantly improved symptoms of daily stool frequency, abdominal pain, and fecal urgency. Nicotine patch treatment doubled the rate of complete symptom remission (49% of the nicotine patch group compared to 24% of the placebo patch group). Histological evidence of inflammation and proctoscopic appearance also improved, but the proctoscopic improvement was not statistically significant. In this study participants were not presently smoking, but the nicotine patch gave more side effects to lifelong non-smokers than to the former smokers. Ten of 11 (91%) lifelong non-smokers had side effects compared to 13 of 24 (54%) former smokers. Two of 23 patients (9%) in the nicotine group withdrew because of side effects, and six of 23 (26%) tolerated doses of only 5-10 mg nicotine/24 hours. Side effects were typical of nicotine excess: headache, nausea, vomiting, dizziness, lightheadedness, sleep disturbance, vivid dreams, skin irritation, sweating, and tremor.

Taken together, these studies suggest that nicotine can improve ulcerative colitis. However, the efficacy, costs, and side effects of nicotine therapy relative to other treatments needs further study.

Nicotine and Parkinson's Disease

As with ulcerative colitis, researchers noted that Parkinson's disease was more common in non-smokers than in smokers. Anecdotal reports mentioned that some Parkinson's disease patients smoked to improve their symptoms.¹³ These reports have gained credibility now that nicotine is known to have a dopaminergic effect in the basal ganglia which may lessen the dopamine deficit of Parkinson's disease.

The relationship between Parkinson's disease and cigarette smoking has been examined in more than 16 case control studies¹⁴⁻²⁰ (Table 2). In these studies the odds ratio that smokers vs. never smokers would develop Parkinson's disease range from 0.2 to 1.1, and 12 of the studies show a statistically significant negative association.

In the strongest epidemiological study to date, the development of Parkinson's disease was assessed in a cohort of 8,006 men followed in the Honolulu heart program.¹⁴ These subjects were classified as non-smokers, current smokers, or ex-smokers based on a questionnaire administered in 1965. Twenty-six years later, hospital death certificates and office medical records were examined to identify cases of Parkinson's disease diagnosed by a neurologist or neurosurgeon. There were 58 such cases; 33 had never smoked, 14 had smoked in the past, and 11 had been classified as current smokers (in 1965). The age-adjusted rates of idiopathic Parkinson's disease per 100,000 person-years were 50.4 for never smokers, 25.0 for past smokers, and 12.5 current smokers. The age-adjusted relative risk of Parkinson's disease for "ever smokers" vs. "never smokers" was 0.34 (95% CI: 0.22 - 0.70).

The negative association of Parkinson's disease and cigarette smoking is strengthened by this study's prospective design, its relatively large size and the creation of an inception cohort (these were incident, not prevalent, cases of idiopathic Parkinson's disease).²¹ Weaknesses of the study are several. There was only one measure of self-reported smoking in 1965 and no subsequent verification of smoking behavior (the authors state that they will publish this study again with smoking verification). There is no mention of the completeness of follow-up to know if cases were missed. And the analysis only used cases that had been diagnosed by a neurologist or neurosurgeon. Because 47 probable or possible cases were excluded, analysis may have been biased. Reporting the data using both "definite cases" alone and "definite, probable, or possible" would have been helpful.

There have been preliminary reports that nicotine improves the symptoms of Parkinson's disease. In one study, six of 13 patients, and in another, nine of 13 patients improved.^{22,23} A recent short-term, placebo-controlled study of two patients showed improvement in daily symptom ratings and level of function-

Whether smoking provides a "protective effect" in Parkinson's disease is problematical. The negative association of smoking and Parkinson's disease may be explained in other ways. Smokers may die earlier so that they are underrepresented among older patients with Parkinson's disease,25,26 or Parkinson's disease patients may have innate neurobehavioral characteristics that may make them less likely to start smoking before the onset of their disease or more likely to quit smoking.27 However, the survival bias factor was not supported in a study of patients with Parkinson's disease of young onset.17 And, although no study has addressed the issue of whether pre-morbid Parkinson's disease patients are less likely to start smoking, the possibility that they are more likely to quit is not supported by studies comparing never-smokers to eversmokers.

We can say that Parkinson's disease is inversely associated with smoking, but whether Parkinson's symptoms can be improved by nicotine treatment has not been adequately studied. Given the weight of evidence and the safety of short-term nicotine administration, a randomized control trial appears in order.

Nicotine and Alzheimer's Disease

Unlike the case with ulcerative colitis or Parkinson's disease where clinical observation led to epidemiological research, the research discovery of reduced cerebral cortex nicotinic receptor density in Alzheimer's disease led to a search for an inverse association between smoking and Alzheimer's disease, and to experimental trials of treatment with nicotine and nicotine analogs.⁶

Table 3 summarizes epidemiological research on the association of Alzheimer's disease and smoking. ²⁸⁻³⁶ The cohort studies, although strongest of the non-experimental studies, are limited by a small number of cases. The point estimates of relative risk of Alzheimer's disease in smokers vs. non-smokers range from 0.27 to 0.70, with only one study being statistically significant. Six of seven case control studies found odds ratios of <1.0 for smokers, but three were not statistically significant and one estimate actually suggested that smoking increased the risk of Alzheimer's disease (OR = 2.0).

The same potential biases discussed above with Parkinson's disease apply to Alzheimer's disease research. The possibility of a survival bias or of subtle manifestations that lead smokers to quit smoking prior to the onset of disease remain. Part of the uncertainty may be due to the fact that the studies were not specifically designed to assess the relationship between smoking and Alzheimer's disease, that they often used different definitions of smoking behaviors, or that an inverse association does not really exist.

The therapeutic role of nicotine for Alzheimer's disease has been studied in several preliminary trials. In one study, 22 Alzheimer's patients, given subcutaneous nicotine in several doses, ³⁷ showed improved finger-tapping ability and ability to sustain visual attention. Another study of six patients found that nicotine had positive effects on information processing and behavioral change. ³⁸ A related study of a cholinesterase inhibitor

(which would lead to increased acetylcholine activity), found improvement in the mini mental state exam but not in the activities of daily living.³⁹

Given current uncertainty about Alzheimer's disease and smoking, it seems reasonable to continue experimental trials that measure clinically relevant cognitive and functional activity outcomes. At present, trials of nicotine in Alzheimer's disease are preliminary and the measures used are sensitive to change. They give us tantalizing information about the mechanisms of disease but make it difficult to know the prospects for clinically useful applications.

Summary

Current evidence about the therapeutic potential of nicotine is strongest for ulcerative colitis. The role, if any, of nicotine therapy in Parkinson's or Alzheimer's diseases is not clear, but further research appears warranted. We need more information about the tolerability and safety of nicotine administration in such diseases. At present, any therapeutic trials of nicotine therapy should occur only as part of research protocols.

Further nonjudgmental examination of the perceived effects of tobacco use may lead to other uses of nicotine. However, given the widespread morbidity and mortality directly attributable to tobacco use, no form of tobacco should be used to deliver nicotine. We encourage everyone who uses tobacco products to quit.

Smoking Cessation

Cornerstone of Prevention in Primary Care

Richard J. Rosen, MD

Despite all we know about the health risks of smoking, 26% of Americans¹ and North Carolinians² smoke. Because stopping smoking is so important to health, it is vital that doctors respond to this challenge. One out of every eight persons who smoke 25 cigarettes per day will develop lung cancer;³ seven out of eight who develop lung cancer will die from the disease.⁴ Prevention is much more effective than treatment.

Today there is a general awareness of the dangers of tobacco (and a consequent gradual reduction in the prevalence of smoking since the Surgeon General's first report 30 years ago), but this means that those who continue to smoke may be more resistant to the efforts of health care professionals about quitting. Also, since many North Carolinians depend on tobacco farming or cigarette manufacturing for their livelihoods, smoking cessation efforts here have special significance.

The prevalence of smoking is inversely related to educational achievement. Doctors have the lowest smoking rates;⁵ high school dropouts, the highest.¹ Because 70% of smokers want to quit and 70% of smokers visit a physician in any given year,⁶ there is a wealth of opportunity open to primary care physicians. When asked whether their doctor's advice would be an effective way to increase their chances of stopping or cutting down the amount they smoke, 43% of smokers said "very effective" and 33%, "somewhat effective." To set a serious tone about smoking, it is vital that physicians' offices be smokefree, in accordance with North Carolina Medical Society policy.

Helping Patients to Quit the Four "A"s

The standard approach to smoking cessation was developed by the National Cancer Institute. The program has undergone rigorous evaluation which shows that I0%-20% of patients remain smoke-free one year after cessation. The NCI approach encourages doctors to use the 4 "A"s: Ask, Advise, Assist, and Arrange.

Dr. Rosen is an internist at 1032 Professional Village, Greensboro 27401. Ask: We must ask each patient who comes to our office: "Do you smoke cigarettes now?" We also want to know additional pertinent history: How long has the patient smoked? Why did the patient start? Who else in the home smokes? Have there been prior attempts to quit and how have they ended? Simple office systems—labels or black dots on the patient charts of smokers—facilitate identification. Designating one employee as the office smoking cessation coordinator also helps. This person may have other duties such as distributing brochures, making follow-up phone calls, keeping patients and physicians up to date with cessation projects, and facilitating group sessions.

Advise: Advice about quitting must come from the physician with conviction and eye-to-eye contact: "As your physician, I believe you should stop smoking. It is the single most important step you can take for your health." To increase impact, advice should be personalized and connected to any symptoms (cough, angina, claudication, heartburn), other risk factors (elevated cholesterol, hypertension) or family history (lung cancer, emphysema). Some patients may have added incentive to quit if relatives or coworkers are adversely affected by their tobacco smoke (for example, a spouse or coworker with asthma or heart disease; children with recurrent otitis media).

We seek to engage the patient in a dialogue. "It may not be easy, but will you stop?" "When?" It is important to consider current stress in the patient's life. Some stress is interminable, but some has a predictable end-point, such as caring for a relative recovering from an illness, a student preparing for exams, a lawyer in a tough case. We endeavor to get the patient to set a specific "quit date," ideally within two weeks. Some patients will adamantly refuse to quit, others will equivocate, but many will be enthusiastic. Choosing a realistic quit date, perhaps after first dealing with current stress, can be considered a triumph for the patient and deserves praise from the physician.

Assist: We need to help patients quit by supplying self-help brochures, behavioral modification programs, nicotine substitutes when needed, and referral to community programs. Self-help manuals are useful and should be provided to all patients who smoke. Refer patients to community resources, such as Project ASSIST coalitions (see related article on page 56), or provide them with pamphlets listing local smoking cessation programs and local units of the American Cancer Society, American Lung Association, and American Heart Association (see Health Watch, page 33).

Behavior modification programs are the mainstay of optimal smoking cessation counseling. Physicians and other support personnel must be prepared to listen and help patients cope with smoking cessation. Many patients experience anxiety, hunger, or irritability after quitting cigarettes (see related article on page 40). Many smokers also abuse alcohol, are overweight, or depressed. Helping them to stop smoking tobacco can be difficult, yet it is still critical to prevent future morbidity and mortality. Stress reduction, and coping and relaxation strategies are particularly helpful. Eating celery, carrots, or unsalted popcorn, and drinking lots of water are easy and helpful coping techniques.

Nicotine replacement therapy, by gum or patch, is an appropriate adjunct to behavioral approaches for some patients who want to quit but are highly nicotine dependent. Nicotine gum (2 mg and 4 mg) comes in boxes of 96 pieces, at a cost to the patient of approximately $35 for the 2 mg size. Two boxes are initially prescribed. Patients chew each piece of gum for about 30 minutes alternating between chewing the gum for two to three minutes and placing it in a cheek for several minutes. Nicotine is absorbed from the oral mucosa, but not if the gum is swallowed (although it may then cause nausea). Absorption is reduced at acid pH, hence coffee, soft drinks, or fruit juices should not be consumed immediately before using the gum. Patients often use 10 pieces per day; maximum consumption should not be more than 30 pieces a day. Ideally, nicotine gum should be tapered or stopped within three months.

Nicotine patches became available in 1992. They created an initial wave of interest in smokers. Doctors were deluged by calls from patients captivated by publicity about this "panacea." Unfortunately, many smokers and their physicians have "discovered" that the patch is a drug, and like most drugs, it has costs and side effects.

Patients apply a nicotine patch on arising and leave it on for 16-24 hours (Table 1). They apply the next patch immediately after removing the used one or the following morning. Patients should begin use with a patch whose nicotine content in milligrams most closely approximates the number of cigarettes smoked per day. The initial size patch is used for up to one month, then the next smaller size for one month; after the smallest size is used, the patient stops. Some patients develop a rash at the site of the patch and must discontinue it; headaches, nausea, or other side effects are rare. Absorption and metabolism of nicotine may vary considerably from patient to patient, which may explain the variability of withdrawal symptoms among patients using the patch. Nicotine and cotinine blood levels show that patches usually provide incomplete replacement compared to levels measured while smoking. People who use the patch (or gum) should not smoke cigarettes simultaneously. While using a nicotine replacement system, patients are able to overcome the habitual hand and mouth activity provided by smoking, but they must eventually face directly the withdrawal symptoms associated with becoming free of nicotine. That's when patients most need a listening counselor, and that's why we shouldn't casually phone in prescriptions for the patch and gum without providing a more complete program for patients who want to quit smoking.

Arrange: We should arrange follow-up for all patients who quit. Ideally, there should be a visit a few days to a week after the quit date. When our patients successfully quit, we should offer congratulations and reinforce the need for vigilance against the temptation to relapse. If our patients "miss" their quit date, ask why. See if a new date can be negotiated and what can be changed to make the new effort work. If our patients have "stopped" but smoke a sporadic cigarette or two, we can discuss precipitating events to see how they can be handled differently in the future. For example, if the greatest difficulty comes during coffee break at work, then moving to a smoke-free lounge may allow the patient to sidestep a vulnerable moment. Be positive about gains a patient has made. A smoking cessation coordinator can call patients periodically to help them deal with withdrawal symptoms. Patients may find relatives or "buddies" to call who will listen to their troubles.

Hospitalized patients who follow the rules in our smokefree hospitals offer a special opportunity. At High Point Regional Hospital, nurses offer counseling, brochures, and follow-up phone calls that encourage patients to use the "running start" of their confinement to remain smoke-free after discharge. This kind of effort elsewhere has resulted in a 50% improvement in 12-month abstinence rates.¹⁰

A Fifth "A"

The most recent edition of the NCI guidelines has added a fifth "A": Anticipatory Guidance. Nicotine addiction is so difficult to shake that physicians, particularly family physicians, pediatricians, and others caring for youngsters, must take the lead in primary prevention. Smoking usually begins between the ages of 13 to 18 when youngsters are in the midst of adolescent rebellion and don't want to listen to parents or other authorities. Telling them not to smoke because they might get lung cancer in the year 2040 doesn't get through to young people who believe they are immortal. If their peers think smoking is cool,

Table 1. Four types of transdermal nicotine replacement systems

Product	Patch sizes available	Duration of application	Patient cost for 1st month
Habitrol	22, 14, 7 mgs	24 hours	$108
Nicoderm	21, 14, 7 mgs	24 hours	$124
Nicotrol	15, 10, 5 mgs	16 hours	$117
Prostep	22, 11 mgs	24 hours	$128

and if they find themselves in situations that require experimenting with cigarettes to be accepted socially, many youngsters succumb. The problem is the high likelihood that individuals will become nicotine-dependent if they smoke even a very few cigarettes!¹¹ Hence experimentation must be prevented.

We can implement school programs in which doctors teach peer leaders and youths about tobacco, tobacco advertising, and social consequences of smoking: smelly hair, stinky clothes, slimy teeth, scummy nails, and no money. Youngsters should be taught to recognize and respond to the deceptiveness of advertising that inplies that smoking promotes agility, beauty, or "coolness." Counter-advertisements during children's television shows like Sesame Street and cartoons are useful.

The Centers for Disease Control estimate that direct smoking-related deaths in America peaked in 1988 at 434,000 and "fell" to 419,000 in 1990. This statistic is a significant outcome marker for our health care system. We must remember that, despite our best efforts, many patients who quit resume smoking. Only about 15% of smokers who stop, whether in programs or alone, whether using patches or gum, are smoke-free one year later. Nonetheless, even a 10% success rate means that, if all the primary care physicians in North Carolina provided smoking cessation advice to all the smokers they see, we would have 80,000 fewer smokers in North Carolina by the end of 1995 and almost 500,000 fewer smokers by the year 2000. As a cornerstone of prevention in primary care, smoking cessation counseling by all health care providers may lead to a significant decline in deaths due to smoking.

North Carolina Project ASSIST

A Call to Action

Sally Herndon Malek, MPH, and Tracy C. Enright, MA

Tobacco causes more deaths in North Carolina each year than alcohol, homicide, suicide, heroin and cocaine use, automobile crashes, AIDS, and fires combined.1 North Carolina Project ASSIST (the American Stop Smoking Intervention Study) is a seven-year (1991-1998), coalition-based project funded by the National Cancer Institute in partnership with the American Cancer Society. The mission of Project ASSIST is to reduce death and health problems from tobacco use in North Carolina. It is specifically focused on prevention of tobacco use by youths and pregnant women, and in helping tobacco users to quit. Project ASSIST coalitions work to make the prevention and control of tobacco use a public and private health priority, and to build the capacity of organizations to address the major health problem of tobacco use (Tables 1, 2).

Physicians can play a critical role in Project ASSIST's efforts by counseling all patients to quit using tobacco and by advocating tobacco-free policies in their own communities. As Dr. Philip R. Lee, US Assistant Secretary for Health said, doctors "need to become smoking experts within [their] communities to counter tobacco industry-sponsored misrepresentation of scientific fact. Whether it is providing justification for policies protecting nonsmokers from the harm caused by passive smoking, preventing underage youth from having easy access to tobacco, or restricting certain types of cigarette promotions, health professionals need to acquire the skills necessary to effectively address these issues. After all, if we don't, who will?"²

Ms. Malek is Project Manager and Ms. Enright is Field Director and staffs the Health Care Task Force for NC Project ASSIST, Division of Adult Health Promotion, NC Department of Environment, Health, and Natural Resources, Raleigh.

Table 1. Goals of NC Project ASSIST by the year 2000

- Cut the rate of youth starting to use tobacco in half.
- ✓ Reduce to 15% the rate of smoking prevalence.
- Reduce to 4% the rate of smokeless tobacco use among males age 16 to 24.

Table 2. Objectives of NC Project ASSIST 1991-1998

Community environment:

- Increase cues and messages that promote a healthy, tobacco-free lifestyle.
- Increase, strengthen, and demonstrate support for public and private policies that promote clean air, restrict minors' access to tobacco products, increase economic incentives to discourage tobacco use, and restrict tobacco advertising and promotion that appeals to minors.

Health care settings:

- Increase to at least 75% the proportion of primary medical and dental care providers who will routinely advise patients to quit smoking and provide assistance and follow-up.
- Ensure that all public health facilities (public or private out- and inpatient clinics and acute care hospitals) will be smoke-free.

Schools:

- Ensure that 100% of schools serving grades K through 12 and public vocational/technical/trade schools will be tobacco-free.
- Ensure that 100% of all schools serving grades K through 12 will use a tested, efficacious tobacco-use prevention curricula.

Worksites:

- Increase to at least 75% the proportion of worksites with comprehensive no-smoking policies.
- Ensure that worksites will devise and maintain strategies that help employees quit smoking and using tobacco.

Community groups:

Encourage community groups and organizations to become involved in ASSIST activities.

How Project ASSIST is Organized in NC

Project ASSIST consists of an executive committee; an overall, state-based coalition; and local, community-based coalitions. Leaders from the state's public health system, the American Cancer Society, and statewide coalition officers make up the executive committee, which oversees the Project and defines policy and budget matters within the scope of the contract. The statewide ASSIST Coalition was founded by 23 original members, one of which was the North Carolina Medical Society.

"Project ASSIST's local coalitions build support for policy change through community education and advocacy."

The state-level coalition and 10 local coalitions cover 24 counties and represent more than 300 organizations interested in preventing and controlling tobacco use. A scientific advisory committee ensures that Project ASSIST initiatives are based on published research and sound science. Statewide task forces and community environment action teams (covering health care, tobacco-free youth and schools, worksites, community groups, clean indoor air, and media) plan state-level activities.

Project ASSIST's local coalitions build support for policy change through community education and advocacy. Local coalitions disseminate information on tobacco and health to the six major media markets in the state. Physicians have been active volunteers in all of the local coalitions, currently serving as chairs of five of the 10 coalitions. Local coalitions train physicians to combine medical expertise with media skills and to serve as media spokespersons on tobacco and health issues.

Project ASSIST Highlights, 1991-94

The planning phase. Project ASSIST's first two years were devoted to building coalitions, conducting a site analysis, developing a comprehensive tobacco use prevention and control plan (copies are available from NC Project ASSIST), and developing an annual action plan to be implemented in 1993-1994. Some highlights of the data collected during site analysis included:

- Approximately 27% of North Carolinians smoke; this gives North Carolina the 10th-highest prevalence in the nation.
- Although smoking is declining among adults, it is increasing slightly among youth.
- Many North Carolinians seriously underestimate the impact of tobacco use on health and overestimate the economic impact of tobacco in the state (see related article on page 28).
- There is strong community support for prevention of tobaccouse among youth (see related article on page 64).

Implementation: media and policy advocacy. A major component of Project ASSIST's strategy involves media and policy advocacy. Media advocacy focuses the attention of the mass media on tobacco use as a major public health problem. It builds community support for policies known to reduce tobacco use. For instance, Project ASSIST coordinated statewide release of and publicity for The Health Consequences of Tobacco Use in North Carolina, the first publication to document the health effects of tobacco use in North Carolina.

Project ASSIST also disseminates information on policy actions to reduce tobacco consumption. In summer 1993, local and state coalition members found themselves deep in a statewide flurry of activity brought on by the passage of state bill HB957, a law that requires state-controlled buildings to set aside 20% of their space (as is practicable) for smoking and preempts local measures to control environmental tobacco smoke (see related article on page 14). Project ASSIST, at the request of the Local Health Director's Association, put together a resource guide designed to help local governments make informed decisions and brought together key groups to facilitate dialogue. Many physician leaders emerged to help increase awareness of the health threat, especially to children, of tobacco use and environmental tobacco smoke. Volunteers built relationships with the media and provided messages on the health aspects of tobacco in North Carolina. ASSIST coalition members served as educational resources for the leadership of the Health Director's Association, local boards of health, city councils, and county commissioners. As a result, 89 new local clean indoor air regulations were passed before HB957 went into effect.

"Many physician leaders emerged to help increase awareness of the health threat, especially to children, of tobacco use and environmental tobacco smoke."

One of Project ASSIST's most important efforts was a press release on tobacco buying operations by youth under the supervision of local ASSIST coalitions across the state (see related article on page 59). This planned, supervised project showed how easy it is for youth under age 18 to purchase cigarettes in North Carolina. The results are used to build community awareness and support for enforcement of laws restricting the sale of tobacco products to minors.

Health Care Task Force

The medical community is deeply involved with Project ASSIST's activities in health care, Project ASSIST promotes the National Cancer Institute's four "A"s—Ask, Advise, Assist, Arrange—that help physicians encourage smoking cessation in their practices (see related article on page 53). The four "A"s provide a framework for brief, focused, and effective smoking cessation messages, but many providers lack the skills to effectively counsel smokers about quitting or not starting to use tobacco. Only three out of five primary care physicians in North Carolina advise their patients at each visit to quit smoking and only one-third arrange follow-up. Project ASSIST aims to increase the number of health care providers in North Carolina who routinely advise patients to quit using tobacco and provide assistance and follow-up.

The Project ASSIST Health Care Task Force has representatives from health care professional organizations, private practice, and academia. The Task Force helps local coalitions by identifying trainers, providing materials, and helping to promote and plan the training of health care practitioners. North Carolina currently has 31 physicians and three dentists prepared to train their peers in effective tobacco-use cessation techniques, and local ASSIST coalitions in Craven, Onslow, Pitt, Macon, Mecklenburg, and Guilford counties have held training sessions for health care providers.

In January 1994, Project ASSIST and the NC Division of Dental Public Health sponsored three sessions at which more than 100 dental health practitioners learned advanced techniques in smoking cessation. This year ASSIST is collaborating with the North Carolina Medical Society's Tobacco Control Task Force to provide tobacco prevention and control sessions, including training for smoking cessation counseling at upcoming Society meetings. Project ASSIST is helping the NC Division of Mental Health to provide similar training for substance abuse prevention professionals.

A subcommittee of the Health Care Task Force focuses on the health of pregnant women. About 45% of white, low-income women in North Carolina report that they smoked during their last pregnancy. The low birth weight rate could be decreased by as much as 20% by eliminating smoking during pregnancy. And babies born to North Carolina women who smoke are 46% more likely to die before age one than babies born to women who don't smoke while pregnant.

The subcommittee disseminates educational materials such as self-help cessation booklets for pregnant women (call I-800-FOR-BABY to obtain free copies of the booklet "If You Smoke" for prenatal patients). The subcommittee is also developing a manual for providers of obstetrical care that will address common barriers to quitting and how to tailor advice to patients.

Project ASSIST sponsors "Quit and Win" events that offer smokers a large cash prize drawing as an incentive to quit for one month, usually during January and February. Physicians play an important role by promoting the programs to their patients who smoke and by recruiting community support. Last year, Quit and Win events were held in Guilford and Wake counties, and more than 600 smokers enrolled; this year, seven of the 10 local coalitions plan to sponsor one.

Opportunities for Physician and Medical Society Involvement

Physicians can become involved in Project ASSIST by:

- Supporting patients by making offices tobacco-free and by consistently recording the tobacco use behavior of each patient just as vital signs are. Assistance in how to help patients quit using tobacco can be obtained from local AS-SIST coalitions or the Project ASSIST office in Raleigh (919/ 733-1881).
- Joining the Health Care Task Force or the subcommittee and helping develop materials for obstetrical care providers (call the Project ASSIST office).
- Becoming involved in statewide media campaigns, efforts to promote clean indoor air, or serving as a contact person for local media.
- Becoming a community leader in the prevention and control of tobacco use by writing letters to the editor and sharing your stories with other health professionals around the state.

Project ASSIST's mission is to help North Carolina create a future in which fewer infants are exposed to tobacco before birth, fewer children become addicted to tobacco, and in which tobacco users who want to quit can find the resources and support they need to become smoke-free. Physicians are leaders in this mission. As Dr. John Dees, past president of the North Carolina Medical Society said: "We cannot continue to just pass resolutions and talk about the issue. We must become more active in support of ordinances, regulations, and laws banning this environmental problem. Join the fight... to help make North Carolina a tobacco-free society by the year 2000."

Illegal Sales of Cigarettes to Minors in North Carolina

Joanna E. Cohen, MHSc, Len C. Stanley, MPH, Jim D. Martin, MS, and Adam O. Goldstein, MD

The detrimental health effects of cigarette use have been known for a long time, but smoking continues to cause an estimated 1,000 smoking-related deaths in this country each day. Since most smokers begin using cigarettes before age 18, reducing the rate of smoking by adolescents is a key to decreasing overall long-term smoking rates, morbidity, and mortality. Unfortunately, public health advocates have not succeeded in decreasing tobacco use by adolescents during the past 10 years. In large part this is due to the more than $4 billion the tobacco industry spends on advertising and promotional campaigns, some of which appeals to youth.

Reduced access to tobacco products can decrease the use of tobacco by young people.²⁴ Most states have laws prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors, but they are rarely enforced. Studies from California, Kansas, Massachusetts, Missouri, Oregon, and Texas show that minors under the age of 18 are usually easily able to purchase cigarettes from merchants and that the illegal selling rates range from 34% to 92%.⁵⁻⁹

In North Carolina, it is illegal for merchants to "knowingly sell" tobacco products to persons under 18 years of age. In spring 1994, North Carolina Project ASSIST (see article on page 56) began its Youth Tobacco Buying Operations. These were supervised attempts by youths aged 11-17 to purchase cigarettes from merchants and vending machines in Buncombe, Craven/Pamlico, Guilford, High, Brunswick, Mecklenburg, Jackson, Onslow, and Wake counties. The focus of the project was community awareness, not enforcement. It had four purposes: 1) to assess the extent of illegal tobacco sales to minors in given communities; 2) to promote community awareness about minors' access to tobacco; 3) to promote merchant awareness of the legal responsibility not to sell tobacco to minors; and 4) to encourage merchants who sell tobacco to minors to change their behavior voluntarily.

Methods

A manual¹⁰ and video,¹¹ produced for the statewide ASSIST coalition, were used to train local ASSIST coalitions and one local youth council to conduct buying of tobacco by youths. Coalition members and staff were taught how to select the stores, map the routes, recruit and train the adolescents and adult drivers, and release the results through press conferences.

Youths aged 11-17 were recruited from churches, YMCAs or YWCAs, school clubs, Scout troops, and the children of coalition members. Youths and parents gave consent for participation in the project. No attempt was made to recruit youth who appeared older than their stated ages. In each community, a non-random sample of grocery, pharmacy, convenience stores, and service stations was selected to constitute approximately one-third of all such stores listed in the local telephone directory yellow pages. Coalition members also located a convenience sample of cigarette vending machines in each community, excluding those in bars and other areas not accessible to minors.

Survey teams consisted of one or more minors and one adult driver. One purchase attempt was made at each location. The minors uniformly attempted to buy a pack of cigarettes at each store or vending machine. After a sale or refusal of a sale, they returned to the car and, with the adult driver, recorded a number of aspects about the purchase attempt: the type of purchase (merchant or vending machine); whether a sale of cigarettes occurred; type of store (grocery, service station, pharmacy, convenience store); whether minors' ages were questioned by the merchant; whether there was a sign posted (as required by law) indicating the illegality of selling cigarettes to minors; whether cigarettes were located behind the counter so that youths had to ask for them or in front of the counter where youths could pick them up themselves; and age and sex of the minors. If merchants questioned the age of youths attempting to purchase cigarettes, they responded with their actual age.

The Epi Info program¹² was used to enter all data. The outcome measure of interest was the illegal sale rate, defined as the number of illegal sales divided by the number of purchase attempts. A total of 1,009 attempts to purchase cigarettes were made as part of this study. Illegal sale rates were calculated separately for minors aged 15 or under and for minors aged 16 to 17. Analyses by age relied on data from 797 purchase attempts (because ages were not recorded in 122 instances and minors aged 15 or under were accompanied by minors 16 or 17 years of age in 90 instances).

Data analysis was performed using Stata. ¹³ Overall and age group-specific sale rates were calculated for purchase attempts from merchants and from vending machines. Bivariate analysis was used to detect relationships between each variable of interest and the illegal sale rate. A logistic regression analysis was used to provide odds ratios and 95% confidence intervals for each variable, adjusted (controlled) for all other variables in the model.

Results

Of 1,009 attempts to purchase cigarettes, 896 (89%) involved direct interactions with merchants and 113 (11%) with vending machines. Table 1 shows that the ability of minors to purchase cigarettes varied by the source of the cigarettes and the minor's age. For the full sample, the illegal sale rate by merchants was 51% (range: 27%-86%). Most merchants (88%) made illegal cigarette sales to minors aged 16 or 17 years (attempts in which all minors were 16 or 17 years old occurred only in three counties). When minors 15 years of age or younger attempted to purchase cigarettes, the illegal sale rate was 41% (range, 18%-51%). This was significantly lower (p<0.001) than when minors were aged 16 or 17 (Table 1). Overall, sale rates varied little by the type of store (Table 2).

Practically all purchasing attempts from vending machines were successful (illegal sale rate of 94%; range, 79%-100%). Minors under age 16 obtained cigarettes from vending machines in 93% of 85 attempts; minors aged 16 or 17 made seven attempts, all successful. Since sale rates varied with the age of the minors and because of the small number of attempts made by minors aged 16 and 17, the remainder of our analyses focus on attempts to purchase cigarettes from merchants by adolescents aged 15 or less.

Table 3 shows descriptive statistics for the study variables relating to purchase attempts by minors aged 15 and under. Merchants questioned the minors' ages in only 44% of purchasing attempts. Signs indicating the illegality of selling cigarettes to minors were posted in only 22% of the visited establishments. Bivariate analyses of the relationship between each factor shown in Table 3 and the illegal sale rate showed that when age was questioned, the sale rate was 5%; when it was not questioned, the rate was 72% (p<0.0001). The illegal sale rate was 55% when minors had to ask for cigarettes, compared to 58% when minors could pick a pack up themselves (p=0.53). When a sign was posted in the store, the sale rate was 33%, compared to 45% when there was no sign posted (p=0.01). The sex of the minors also seemed to affect sale rates. When only boys participated in the purchase attempt, the sale rate was 32%, compared to 42% for girls only (p=0.03). Sale rates did not appear to be related to the type of store in which the purchase attempt took place.

Table 4 presents the odds ratios (OR) obtained by logistic regression for illegal sale rates, adjusted for all other factors. To produce the model, store type was coded using the "effect coding" technique. Because logistic regression procedures drop entries with any missing values, the analysis is based on the 315 purchase attempts by minors aged 15 and under for which we had complete data. Two factors were strongly associated with sales:

1) When merchants asked the minors' ages, illegal sales of cigarettes were much less likely to occur (OR = 0.02; 95% CI, 0.01 - 0.04). 2) Boys were less likely to be sold cigarettes than girls or groups of boys and girls (OR = 0.25; 95% C1, 0.12 - 0.51). Keeping cigarettes behind the counter, having a sign posted, and type of store were not significantly associated with illegal sale rates.

Discussion

Most adults who are regular smokers start smoking before the age of 18, the legal age for purchasing tobacco products. ¹⁵ Furthermore, most adolescents who smoke buy their own cigarettes. ¹⁶ Thus, North Carolina merchants who illegally sell to minors contribute to new generations of North Carolina citizens who are addicted to tobacco products. An estimated four million packs of cigarettes were sold illegally to North Carolina minors in 1991, netting almost $7 million in revenues to North Carolina merchants. ¹⁷ Our data show that the state's law against selling tobacco to minors is virtually ignored, especially when minors are 16 or 17 years old. Even when minors are age 15 or younger, two out of five merchants readily sell to them (Tables 1, 2).

Our data also show that North Carolina laws against cigarette sales to minors through vending machines are ignored. Almost all attempts by minors to purchase cigarettes from vending machines were successful. These unsupervised machines, located in restaurants, service stations, or other public areas frequented by adolescents provide even easier access to cigarettes than do merchants.

Finally, our data identify factors that predict whether or not a minor will be sold cigarettes (Table 4). Merchants were significantly less likely to make illegal sales if they asked the adolescent's age. Merchants were less likely to sell to boys age 15 or under than to girls. We found no relation between illegal sales and the type of store, the location of cigarettes behind or in front of the counter, or the presence or absence of a sign indicating a legal age for tobacco purchases.

Studies elsewhere have also found that minors have easy access to tobacco products. In Missouri, minors aged 13 or 14 were sold cigarettes 46% of the time, and girls were able to buy more often than boys (56% vs. 36%).8 Illegal sale rates were higher in Texas than Missouri, but the minors were older. In neither state did posting of warning signs make a difference,8 but some studies have found that stores with warning signs are less likely to sell to minors and that the type of retail store does influence illegal sale rates. 5,9,18 However, no previous studies have used regression techniques to control for other potential influences on illegal cigarette sale rates as we did. Our results, therefore, have important implications for policy makers, public health advocates, concerned parents, and minors themselves.

Commentary

Current North Carolina law on youth access to tobacco is ineffective. There is no enforcement mechanism and the law provides penalties only if a merchant "knowingly" sells cigarettes to minors. The insertion of the word "knowingly" into the 1991 law was made with the full support of the tobacco industry. It allows a merchant to escape responsibility simply by saying "I didn't know she was only 15."

Attempts to modify and strengthen the North Carolina law in 1993 were unsuccessful despite overwhelming support from public health agencies throughout the state. Current North Carolina law does not address or regulate vending machine sales of cigarettes, licensing of tobacco retailers, distribution of free cigarette samples, the location of cigarettes in retail stores, or other policy options that might decrease illegal tobacco sales and thereby decrease tobacco consumption by youths.

The Synar Amendment to the federal Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration Reorganization Act took effect October I, 1993. It requires all states to enact and enforce laws prohibiting the sale or distribution of tobacco products to minors in order to receive block grant funds from the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration.¹⁹ The law specifically requires enforcement of youth access to tobacco laws via unannounced, random inspections. States that fail to achieve specified reductions in the rate of illegal sales of tobacco products to minors risk losing federal funding. This means North Carolina could lose $2.5 million in 1995, and up to $10 million in 1998, for failure to enforce the law.²⁰

The results of our study, although not done to establish baseline sale rate estimates, do suggest that North Carolina must change the way it regulates youth access to tobacco products if it wants to avoid violating the Synar Amendment. One option would be to substantially strengthen the enforcement of existing laws. Communities that regularly and systematically enforce their access laws have lower rates of illegal sales to youth.²⁴ Successful enforcement mechanisms include unannounced, random compliance checks of all retail stores that sell tobacco products, with small fines for noncompliance and loss of license for repeated illegal tobacco sales to minors.

Any new strengthening of youth access to tobacco legislation must guard against tobacco industry-sponsored "preemption" bills (see related article on page 14). The tobacco industry itself says that it does not want youth to smoke, but it opposes licensing of tobacco vendors, opposes youth involvement in enforcement efforts, supports measures to penalize minors for purchasing tobacco products, and has sponsored merchant education programs that are ineffective.^{21,22}

Even without statewide action, however, North Carolina communities can choose to inform the public about and promote and support local restrictions on youth access to tobacco. Such restrictions may originate from county Boards of Health, city councils, county commissions, concerned parents, or minors themselves, all of whom have an interest in protecting minors from addiction to tobacco (see related article on page 14).

The youths who participated in the Project ASSIST coalitions devised and carried out merchant education programs to help increase voluntary compliance with NC law. Education alone, however will not supplant the need for active enforcement and strengthening of existing laws. Our study results suggest that future regulations should require merchants to check identification and should eliminate vending machine tobacco sales. Compliance checks should involve purchase attempts by girls as well as boys, since girls are more likely to be sold cigarettes.

The primary limitation of our study is the missing data for some variables, particularly minors' age and sex, and the location of cigarettes. Excluding cases with missing data leads to an increase in the overall illegal sale rate, but there is no reason to suspect any systematic bias that would change our results substantially. Our study is one of the largest, community-based investigations of youth access to tobacco, but it did not examine the illegal sale rates of smokeless tobacco or the role of point-of-purchase tobacco advertising and promotion on adolescent tobacco use and sale rates.

We have shown that minors across North Carolina have easy access to tobacco products and that the current state law restricting youth access to tobacco is not enforced. Efforts to modify and enforce these laws should focus on public health measures proven to lead to reduced youth access to and reduced consumption of tobacco.

Tobacco-Free Youth

Expanding Focus Group Networks

Rudolph S. Jackson, DrPH, Margaret F. Brake, BA, Sandra Headen, PhD, and Joseph Sanders

The North Carolina chapter of the National Black Leadership Initiative on Cancer, in collaboration with Project ASSIST (a statewide coalition against tobacco use), has made youth and community awareness of the effects of tobacco and tobacco advertising one of its primary objectives. This is consistent with the goals of Healthy People 2000 to reduce tobacco use by the nation's youth.^{1,2} Toward this end, staff members from both organizations joined school personnel from Craven County in a focus group program to identify ways to prevent tobacco use by middle and high school students.³

The project had a two-tier arrangement. First, high school students in Craven County were selected and trained in focus group interview procedures. Then, after training, these students led focus groups to identify tobacco-related issues of concern to teens and preteens. The focus group sessions had three specific purposes: 1) To explore the attitudes and perceptions of teenagers on such topics as access and availability of cigarettes and other tobacco products, 2) to examine the effects of tobacco advertising on teen smoking behavior, and 3) to assess whether students were willing to engage in tobacco control activities and strategies to limit tobacco use by their peers.

Methods

Ten student leaders from two Craven County high schools, recruited by high school counselors and athletic coaches, were trained as group facilitators. All were members of Natural Helpers, an organization that is part of the overall structure of middle and high schools in the county. Students achieve the distinction of becoming a Natural Helper by vote of their peers. Natural Helpers receive specialized training that allows them to assist classmates with day-to-day problems confronted on campus and serve as role models for other students. Because the Natural Helper network is widely accepted, the students selected as facilitators were able to recruit other students as participants in the focus groups.

The training of facilitators involved in-depth discussion about the purpose of the project, a review of the focus group survey questions, and role-play interview sessions. Student facilitators received coaching from their fellow trainees as well as from school advisors who participated in the sessions.

During each focus group session conducted by the Natural Helpers, the teen participants completed an anonymous survey about tobacco use behaviors and attitudes. To synthesize the salient themes of each session, written staff notes of the session, completed surveys, and audiotape recordings were reviewed and compiled. We report here the results of those sessions based on aggregate responses from the student participants.

Results

Subjects. Seven focus groups comprised 70 students from four middle schools and three high schools in Craven County. Focus groups were open to smokers and non-smokers, and participants were recruited through general announcements at each school, as well as by personal recommendation of teachers and counselors who had been apprised of the objectives. Student participants were almost evenly divided between eighth and ninth graders, and their ages ranged from 11-17 years. Slightly more than half of the students were female (54%); 53% were white, 37% were black, and the remaining 10% were either Hispanic or Asian (Table 1).

In terms of smoking experience, 73% had never smoked, 23% had smoked a few times in the past year, and 4% smoked on a weekly or daily basis (Tables 1, 2). National surveys indicate that a much higher percentage of ninth-through 12thgrade students have usually tried smoking. The relatively low rates among our participants are likely due to several factors, such as the racial composition and the age of the participants. Studies have shown that smoking rates are significantly lower among black youths than white.^{2,5} The large proportion of black students in our focus groups may be one reason for the high percentage of students who had never tried cigarettes. Similarly, cigarette use is lower among eighth and ninth graders, many of whom are just starting to experiment with tobacco, than among 11th or 12th graders, many of whom are regular tobacco users. Although most teen participants did not smoke themselves, 34% disclosed that one or more of their friends smoked. In any case, the non-smoking perspective of the majority of teens in this study probably means that their responses would differ from those of teen smokers.

Tobacco and health. In discussions of general health issues, students identified health conditions such as AIDS and cancer as primary concerns. Also important were sexually transmitted diseases and teen pregnancy. As in other studies of youth and tobacco awareness, ⁶⁻⁹ students were well aware of health problems related to cigarette smoking and the use of other tobacco products—lung cancer, emphysema, heart disease, asthma, and oral cancer. They also believe that tobacco products, although harmful to health, do not affect teen users until they are much older.

Attitudes and norms of tobacco use. The teen participants discussed the reasons why other teens begin smoking or chewing tobacco. These reasons include peer pressure, a desire to be "cool," the appearance of maturity, the relief of stress and family tension at home, and the modeling behavior of family members who smoke and accept tobacco use. Few students were able to recognize the pressure to smoke they themselves faced, even though several of their close friends smoked.

Students presented several reasons why teens resist using tobacco: the negative health effects, the legal age limit for purchasing tobacco products, the requirements of good physical conditioning for sports participation, the opinions of friends and the perceptions of others, and the fact that they did not want to get hooked on cigarettes.

The focus group participants expressed a range of opinions about being around others who smoked. A majority of the students objected to inhaling secondhand smoke, but the prevailing attitude was that "you get used to it." One common comment was that smokers harm only themselves, and that smoking is a personal decision that does not appear to directly effect anyone else.

Access and availability of tobacco products. Easy access to tobacco products appears to be the accepted norm among teens. Cigarettes can be obtained from family members, older friends who regularly buy cigarettes, or through personal purchases. Participants said it is not difficult for young persons to purchase cigarettes or other tobacco products because many store owners and clerks simply do not check the age of buyers. Students pointed out that some students sell cigarettes at school, either by the pack or as singles (at 25 cents each or at three for $1). Participants suggested that increasing the cost of cigarettes, although a deterrent to some, would not limit others who would still find ways to get cigarettes (bartering, pooling resources, theft).

There are few real limitations as to where teens can use tobacco. Students emphasized that shopping malls, parks, and other public areas are popular places to smoke. School policy does not allow smoking on school premises, but smoking in bathrooms, on athletic fields, and near parking areas is widespread. Private lounges for teacher smoking are a concern. Many students view teachers as role models who can influence smoking behavior; they believe that if a school has a "no smoking" policy, it should apply to teachers and students.

Tobacco advertising and promotion. Students indicated that they perceive mixed messages in tobacco advertising. For example, attractive, healthy females are shown in the same ads alongside the Surgeon General's warning about health risks. Opinions differed about who the ads are designed to influence. Some teens believed that ads are designed primarily to reinforce the behavior of current smokers rather than to recruit new smokers. One eighth grader noted, however, that "advertisers are trying to influence kids at an earlier age," and some ads should be banned, "especially [Joe] Camel, which influences the wrong people [kids]." Some teens felt that five-year-olds could readily identify the Joe Camel cigarette ads because of the cartoon figure used for promotion. On the other hand, many participants failed to see the connection between brand recognition by younger children and the onset of smoking as adolescents and young adults. ¹⁰⁻¹³

The participants' feelings about tobacco advertising can be summarized by the following comments: 1) Tobacco alone is not the problem; it includes alcohol and other drugs. 2) Tobacco companies are interested in making money; it does not matter who gets hurt. 3) Cigarette advertising shows only one side of the story without mention of the health effects of cigarette smoking.

Student commitment to tobacco control activities. When students were questioned about how to limit or reduce the use of tobacco products by teens and preteens, several categorical responses emerged. These included legal restrictions, increased awareness through education, and more student involvement in organized efforts. Several innovative strategies were proposed that could be achieved through student organization.

Legal restrictions. Students discussed the merits of traditional legal remedies, such as increasing the number of locations where smoking is banned and stricter enforcement of existing statutes. Merchants should be required to check age identification of buyers and there should be severe penalties for those who ignore the law. Smoking bans should be applied vigorously in school settings, and teachers and administrators should take more responsibility for monitoring smoking at school by being visible in hallways and bathrooms.

Increased tobacco education in schools. Students thought that educational programs on tobacco in middle and high schools could be useful, especially if they include reports of first-hand experiences by individuals who had seen or experienced the negative effects of tobacco use. However, students were quick to point out that simply talking about smoking is not enough.

Smoking cessation. Participants stressed the lack of smoking cessation counseling for teens who want to quit. Several students volunteered to serve as peer counselors (if they themselves were trained) to help students stop smoking. Just like adult smokers, teens find it difficult to stop smoking, but they have few places to turn for help.¹⁴

Student organization and participation. Students think they should be involved in efforts to limit tobacco use by adolescents. For instance, they think that billboards and posters, with tobacco-free messages designed by and for students, should be displayed at school to make the consequences of tobacco use real. These visual reminders should be changed periodically. They also suggested drama presentations and "smoke-free walks for health" as ways to involve students in tobacco prevention campaigns.

In several urban areas across the country, including North Carolina, studies have shown how easy it is for teens and preteens to purchase cigarettes (see related article on page 59). Our participants suggested using organized groups of teenagers to meet with store owners on an individual basis and to enlist their support in refusing to sell tobacco to underage teens. Once a part of the tobacco control effort, these merchants would be publicly recognized as primary supporters of Tobacco-Free Youth.

Discussion

Building within-school support for tobacco control and prevention programs requires a strong core of student involvement. It is extremely important to provide forums in which teens and preteens can express themselves openly. The Craven County experience reported here provided such an opportunity, and the use of an established peer organization such as Natural Helpers made the discussions even more effective.

One limitation of our study was the high percentage of nonsmokers in the focus groups. Policy issues important to teen smokers may well differ from those developed by students who have never or rarely smoked. Nevertheless, our participants had strong opinions of how and why their peers smoked. As documented in other studies of tobacco use patterns among teens, participants in our project were well aware of the health threats of tobacco. But even with this knowledge, 23% of these adolescents in our groups had experimented with tobacco in the past year, thus risking and underestimating the likelihood that they would become addicted to tobacco. These same students tend to discount the health effects of environmental tobacco smoke, suggesting that future tobacco prevention campaigns should include targeted messages about how environmental tobacco smoke efffects adolescents who think of themselves as non-smokers.

Participants felt that simply talking to other students about the health risks of tobacco was inadequate. They offered three alternative approaches to better target the problems associated with teenage smoking. A necessary first step is to limit the availability and accessibility of tobacco products through legal channels. Authorities and store owners should provide closer monitoring and enforcement of laws to prevent sales of tobacco to minors at retail outlets and through vending machines.

Secondly, schools should be more supportive of "smoke-free environments" on and around school grounds, and should provide help with smoking cessation for students and staff who smoke. School administrators could improve the health of their students by proposing, supporting, and enforcing comprehensive, tobacco-free policies that apply to teachers and staff as well as students. Along with appropriate role-modeling and educational campaigns, schools should provide disincentives for those who break such policies and incentives for those who comply. Such an approach would get the attention of students as well as school personnel.

Organized student efforts are vital to reducing adolescent tobacco consumption. Enlisting retail merchants in a campaign to stop the selling of tobacco to teenagers was recommended as part of a student action plan. Students think that they could recruit retail merchants to actively reduce teen smoking in North Carolina. Retail merchants, including pharmacists who sell tobacco products, would thus participate in tobacco control and prevention efforts rather than contribute to youth addiction to tobacco. Other student-directed campaigns might target the removal of tobacco advertisements that appeal to kids.

Increasing the involvement of students would allow adolescents, who are most directly affected by tobacco use, to act as advocates of sustained health for themselves and their peers. Such advocacy may create enough healthy peer pressure to counter the $4 billion that US tobacco companies spend each year on advertising and promotional campaigns. Students are willing to work with adults, teachers, and other policy makers on strategies to keep themselves tobacco-free. It is up to us to help them succeed. \square

"I can't imagine running my practice without CompuSystems' help." Randy Long, M.D., Lexington, NC

Earning its way from the first day

"CompuSystems' Medical Practice Management System has been an integral part of my practice since I opened five years ago. Actually, we had the equipment in place and had been through training two weeks before opening. That investment paid off right away: In our first day, we used the Appointment Scheduler module to make 76 appointments."

Flexible software to suit your needs

"One of the Medical System features we've found most beneficial is its flexibility. There's almost always more than one way to complete a given task, so we can select the options that suit our preferences and operational needs. And CompuSystems' staff is always available to help us determine how best to use the software in our office."

Outstanding service to stay productive

"The service and maintenance we get from CompuSystems couldn't be better. They stay on top of the myriad changes implemented by Medicare and other third-party carriers, so our software is always up to date. If we have a question or problem, we can get the help we need. Finally, consistency is provided at all levels: The telephone support staff keeps excellent records, so we don't start over each time we call, and the on-site hardware service is expert.

"After five years, I have only praise for CompuSystems, and I can't imagine running my practice without their help."

YOCON® YOHIMBINE HCI

Description: Yohimbine is a 3a-15a-208-17a-hydroxy Yohimbine-16a-car-boxylic acid methyl ester. The alkaloid is found in Rubaceae and related trees. Also in Rauwolfia Serpentina (L) Benth. Yohimbine is an indolalkylamine alkaloid with chemical similarity to reserpine. It is a crystalline powder, odorless. Each compressed tablet contains (1/12 gr.) 5.4 mg of Yohimbine Hydrochloride.

Action: Yohimbine blocks presynaptic alpha-2 adrenergic receptors. Its action on peripheral blood vessels resembles that of reserpine, though it is weaker and of short duration. Yohimbine's peripheral autonomic nervous system effect is to increase parasympathetic (cholinergic) and decrease sympathetic (adrenergic) activity. It is to be noted that in male sexual performance, erection is linked to cholinergic activity and to alpha-2 adrenergic blockade which may theoretically result in increased penile inflow, decreased penile outflow or both.

Yohimbine exerts a stimulating action on the mood and may increase anxiety. Such actions have not been adequately studied or related to dosage although they appear to require high doses of the drug. Yohimbine has a mild anti-diuretic action, probably via stimulation of hypothalmic centers and release of posterior pituitary hormone.

Reportedly, Yohimbine exerts no significant influence on cardiac stimulation and other effects mediated by 8-adrenergic receptors, its effect on blood pressure, if any, would be to lower it; however no adequate studies are at hand to quantitate this effect in terms of Yohimbine dosage.

Indications: Yocon® is indicated as a sympathicolytic and mydriatric. It may have activity as an aphrodisiac.

Contraindications: Renal diseases, and patient's sensitive to the drug. In view of the limited and inadequate information at hand, no precise tabulation can be offered of additional contraindications.

Warning: Generally, this drug is not proposed for use in females and certainly must not be used during pregnancy. Neither is this drug proposed for use in pediatric, geriatric or cardio-renal patients with gastric or duodenal ulcer history. Nor should it be used in conjunction with mood-modifying drugs such as antidepressants, or in psychiatric patients in general.

Adverse Reactions: Yohimbine readily penetrates the (CNS) and produces a complex pattern of responses in lower doses than required to produce peripheral a-adrenergic blockade. These include, anti-diuresis, a general picture of central excitation including elevation of blood pressure and heart rate, increased motor activity, irritability and tremor. Sweating, nausea and vomiting are common after parenteral administration of the drug. ^{1,2} Also dizziness, headache, skin flushing reported when used orally. ^{1,3}

Dosage and Administration: Experimental dosage reported in treatment of erectile impotence. $1.3.4\,$ 1 tablet (5.4 mg) 3 times a day, to adult males taken orally. Occasional side effects reported with this dosage are nausea, dizziness or nervousness. In the event of side effects dosage to be reduced to ½ tablet 3 times a day, followed by gradual increases to 1 tablet 3 times a day. Reported therapy not more than 10 weeks. 3

How Supplied: Oral tablets of Yocon* 1/12 gr. 5.4 mg in bottles of 100's NDC 53159-001-01 and 1000's NDC 53159-001-10.

Letters to the Editor

The "Tobacco Issue" To the Editor:

On behalf of the Boards of Directors, staff, and countless volunteers of the North Carolina offices of the American Heart Association, American Cancer Society, and American Lung Association, the Tri-Agency Council commends the North Carolina Medical Society for its publication of the January Journal titled "Ashes to Ashes: Snuffing Out the Tobacco Epidemic."

As the largest organization of physicians in the state, the North Carolina Medical Society is setting a standard of leadership and integrity that commands the respect and veneration of not only those in health agencies such as ours, but of the entire citizenship of this state. The counsel and advice of physicians has been and will always be invaluable in safeguarding the public health. Knowing that tobacco use is a factor in at least one out of five deaths in our country, this Journal exhibits a responsible and conscientious effort to alert the public to both the dangers of tobacco use and the concerns of physicians about this, the leading cause of preventable disease and early death in the US today.

The Hippocratic Oath is aptly fulfilled in this issue, which "...prescribe(s) regimen for the good of (my) patients," and puts the interest of the public above personal or organizational gain.

North Carolina
Tri-Agency Council:
M. Robert Cooper, MD
President, American Cancer Society
Rubin F. Maness, MD
President, American Lung Association
Robert J. Applegate, MD
President, American Heart Association

To the Editor:

On behalf of the more than 80,000 members of the American Academy of Family Physicians, I want to commend the North Carolina Medical Society for devoting its January issue of the North Carolina Medical Journal to the topic of tobacco.

Tobacco contributes to the death of more Americans than any other preventable cause. Our Academy has been a leader in seeking to combat tobacco use as an unnecessary cause of death and disability.

We wish to recognize the leadership your society has taken in publishing this special issue so as to better inform physicians and the public about the clinical, economic, and policy issues that will better help them address tobacco use as a major medical problem. Keep up the good work!

In the Tarheel Tradition To the Editor:

As a member of the Journal's Editorial Board and an occasional contributor to the "Carolina Physician's Bookshelf," I was pleased to read Dr. Toole's review of Dr. Bumgarner's book The Health of the Presidents (NC Med J 1994;55:569). Dr. Toole seems to have enjoyed the book as much as I did.

Journal readers should know that Dr. Bumgamer is a native North Carolinian who practiced long and successfully as an internist and cardiologist in Greensboro before retiring several years ago. It is evident that he has continued to be productive in his retirement.

There is a wonderful tradition of Tarheel literary figures, many of whom have lived or currently live in Greensboro, such as Randall Jarrell, Allen Tate, Peter Taylor, and Fred Chappell. I am pleased when we can recognize our Tarheel medical writers as well.

Alzheimer's and Cognex To the Editor:

In November's Health Watch ("A New Era: Alzheimer's Is Becoming Manageable," NC Med J 1994;55:539-42), Dr. Fred Allen discusses Alzheimer's in a simulated conversation between himself and the daughter of someone suffering from the disease. I am a practicing neurologist and I found Dr. Allen's discussion contradictory, particularly regarding the use of medications to ameliorate symptoms of dementia. Dr. Allen discouraged the use of medications to treat agitation, confusion, and hallucinations, yet he encouraged the use of tacrine and mentioned it by its brand name, Cognex, three times in the article.

I believe that medications, employed gently and expertly, can offer considerable symptomatic relief to patients by controlling distressing symptoms such as nocturnal agitation, violent outbursts, hallucinations, paranoia, delusions, and anxiety. Of course, the excessive use of psychotropic medications is deplorable. An ample literature documents how the inappropriate and excessive use of psychotropic medications contributes to falling, incontinence, aspiration pneumonia, and a host of other preventable complications in demented persons. Nevertheless, I believe that small doses of psychotropic medications often provide tremendous symptomatic relief.

On the other hand, I am not disposed to use tacrine. It is highly toxic, expensive, and rarely works. Only 20% of individuals note any response, and those tend to be the ones who were least sick in the first place. Extensive and frequent hematological and hepatic monitoring is necessary, and significant gastrointestinal side effects are common.

Dr. Allen failed to properly counsel his patient and the caregiver on the downside of Cognex; at the end of the simulated conversation the patient's daughter states: "I'll ask my mother's doctor to start mother on Cognex...." Let's hope that the family doctor has a sense of primum non nocere.

J. Griffith Steel, MD East Carolina Neurology 2501 Stantonsburg Road Greenville, NC 27834

Dr. Fred Allen responds:

I appreciate Dr. Steel's comments. The simulated office visit (between myself and an Alzheimer's family member) in my recent Health Watch article reflects a personal approach to diagnosing and managing Alzheimer's disease. A single such example cannot demonstrate all the issues families encounter in the diagnosis and course of the disease. There certainly are times when it is appropriate to use antidepressants or neuroleptics to treat behavioral symptoms.

I wanted the article to raise awareness of Alzheimer's disease, and responses we've received suggest that I accomplished this. Memory and cognitive impairments are cardinal features of Alzheimer's. The public and many physicians remain unaware that patients who suffer enough memory loss to interfere with everyday activities need help. Unfortunately, many patients wait until symptoms are severe or at a crisis, when pharmacologic and nonpharmacologic strategies are not as effective. Early diagnosis and management are essential.

In our practice we attempt to promote comprehensive Alzheimer's care. We offer management assistance targeted at diagnosis, counseling, coping strategies, and ethical-legal issues, as well as nonpharmacologic and pharmacologic treatment, and recommendations for nursing home placement. Agitation, confusion, and hallucinations are often the symptoms that trigger nursing home placement. These symptoms can vary during the course of the illness, and at times they require symptomatic medications. Medications may be useful adjuncts to nursing strategies and to treatments directed specifically at the cognitive features.

Why did I mention tacrine? Tacrine (Cognex) is the first and at this time the only drug approved for treating the memory loss of Alzheimer's disease. Its true value as a therapeutic agent may not yet be clear, but combined with the holistic management approach I described in my article, I have found it quite effective. It is critical to use the maximum possible dose. Reaching that dose requires careful titration using caregiver and family input about the treatment response.

I disagree with Dr. Steel. Tacrine is not highly toxic. More than a year of marketing and more than 110,000 patients on the drug support this conclusion. The less common type of adverse event—disturbance of gastrointestinal function (nausea, occasional vomiting or diarrhea)—is a cholinergic response, which is dose-related, and is manageable with dosage adjustments and by other techniques. Elevation of serum alanine aminotransaminase (ALT) seems related to the length of time on tacrine treatment; it is reversible and to date there has been no serious liver toxicity resulting in death.

The expense of treatment in Alzheimer's must be considered against the cost of having no treatment and no hope.

Dr. Steel's contention that the drug "rarely works" requires that we ask what "work" means. Most drugs "work" when the level of care includes increased attention to patients and their family members, accessing support services, the use of pharmacologic and behavior modification therapies, as well as agents that target cognitive problems. It is unrealistic to think that we are going to cure Alzheimer's, yet the same is true of most chronic illnesses. Physicians might recall that our treatment expectations are "rarely to cure, sometimes to comfort, but always to console."

Physicians should inform the family about what treatments are available and what are realistic efficacy and safety expectations for Alzheimer's patients. With tacrine, the inconvenience of lab tests and four-times-a-day dosing must be balanced against the family desire for a possible treatment benefit. As physicians, we know that our attitudes can affect patient response, both negatively and positively. I feel that hope remains important.

The medical community must step forward and urge real care for Alzheimer's patients and their families, not just brief office visits or prescriptions in place of a supportive medical environment. Our patients need and ask for treatment now. We must continue to advocate access to the best currently available therapies. Our oath is to provide care, perhaps less than we want, but care that is important to our patients and families.

Eye On Ergonomics To the Editor:

In response to the November article by Frazier et al on mandatory reporting of occupational health problems (NC Med J 1994;55:526-31), I would like to address ergonomics and the computer.

Presbyopia (loss of accommodation) can cause headaches, pain in the neck and shoulder muscles, fatigue, anxiety, and irritability in 40-plus-year-old computer operators. The symptoms are due to wearing bifocal glasses and poor placement of computer screens. Everyone knows that a typewriter return on a desk puts the keyboard at the proper height for comfortable typing. Many workers are not aware that placement of the computer screen is also important. It is usually placed where most convenient or where it looks best for the decor. Therefore, it is often stacked on a hard drive or placed at eye level on a shelf in front of a seated computer operator.

Computer operators younger than 40 don't usually care about the placement of the screen because they have good accommodation. Bifocal wearers, on the other hand, become miserable when they have to lift their chins and move forward to see the screen. They often do not understand the source of their discomfort and seek an ophthalmologist's care. Even after the problem is explained, the operator is usually reluctant to complain about the screen location because they feel that asking for a change indicates that they are not as capable as younger workers. Or, they might think that the screen cannot be moved.

A possible solution is to use computer glasses with a high bifocal or no bifocal. Or, employers, employees, architects, and computer sales personnel could be educated about ergonomics. New desk designs that better accommodate computer equipment are available, although just moving the screen down may solve the problem.

I hope this information helps physicians recognize that screen position is a possible source of patient complaints.

Melvin D. Childers, MD Charlotte Ophthalmology Clinic, PA 4335 Colwick Road Charlotte, NC 28211

The author and an associate respond:

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) states that "eyestrain is the single largest category of complaints among visual display terminal (VDT) users." It is often worse in those who spend more than four hours a day at a monitor or are continually looking back and forth between documents and the monitor. The situation is compounded by glare from excessive illumination from overhead lights or windows resulting in eye irritation, eye fatigue, headaches, or blurred vision. Dr. Childers' letter prompts the following comments on several aspects of office ergonomics and especially the use of VDTs:

Monitor placement. The NC Division of Occupational Safety and Health suggests that, in order to improve head and neck posture, VDT users should avoid looking too far up or down in order to see the monitor screen. The center of the screen should be positioned so that the viewing angle is 15 to 25 degrees below eye level. It is a good rule of thumb to place the monitor about an arm's length away with the top of the screen at eye level when looking at the horizon. Place a sturdy item underneath a monitor to raise it, and remove items such as the central processing unit to lower it. Monitor stands work well. A keyboard tray helps increase monitor viewing distance.

Excessive illumination or glare. Glare causes discomfort and reduces ability to see. It occurs when parts of the field of view are excessively bright in relation to the general level of screen brightness. The alternating dilatation and constriction of the pupil send contradictory information to the retina about light levels. Many types of anti-glare filters are available. Glare can also be reduced or eliminated by covering windows, reducing the number of light bulbs in overhead fixtures, tilting monitors, erecting partitions, or moving the workstation. Monitors should be placed at right angles to light sources such as windows, never in front of or facing a window.

Comfort at the monitor. The eye is designed to see comfortably at distances greater than arm's length, so muscles controlling vision must contract when using a VDT. This muscle contraction is not a problem when it occurs for short periods of time, but if it occurs without a break, eye muscles cramp and cause "eye aches." To prevent this:

 Periodically alternate between types of work to rest your eyes. Look away

- from your monitor to a dark area periodically to rest your eyes.
- Have your eyes examined regularly and use special corrective lenses for work if needed. Bifocal wearers should consider obtaining full lenses focused at monitor distance, not reading distance. Use adequate light but not so much that it causes screen glare.
- Move around and shift your body often for more comfort.

Correct workstation adjustment. For increased comfort and productivity, users may want to consider the following general recommendations:

- Adjust seat height so upper arms hang vertically, elbows bent at about 90 degrees, shoulders relaxed, and wrists fairly straight.
- Adjust the backrest to support the small of the back and provide firm support.
- Keep knees bent with feet resting on the floor or on a footrest if the chair must be raised to adjust for height.
- Position the monitor an arm's length away, directly in front of you and the top of the screen level with your eyes.
- Use a document holder next to the screen rather than laying papers flat.

VOLTAREN®

diclofenac sodium Oelayed-Refease (enteric-coated) Tablets

diciolenac potassium Immediate-Release Tablets

INDICATIONS AND USAGE

Moltanen Debyerd-Pelease or Cataliam Immediate-Pelease Tablets are indicated for the acute and chronic treatment of signs and symptoms of theumatord anthrilis, osteoarchinis, and ankylosing spondylibs. Only Cataliam is indicated for the management of pain and primary dysmenormea, when prompt pain relief is desired, because it is formulated to provide earlier plasma concentrations of dictionary is see CLINICAL PHARMACOLOGY, Pharmacokinetics and Clinical Studies).

CON IMMODICATIONS
Olicidenacin either formulation. Voltaren or Catallam, is contraindicated in patients with hypersensitivity to diciolenac. Dictolenacishould not be given to patients who have experienced asthma, urticaria, or other allergic hypereactions after taking aspirin or other NSAIOS. Severe, rairely fatal, anaphylactic-like reactions to dictolenaciave been reported in such patients.

WARNINGS

Physicians should inform patients about the signs and/or symptoms of serious G.I. Toxicily and what steps to take if they occur.

Studies to date have not identified any subset of patients not at risk of developing peptic ulceration and bleeding. Except for a prior history of serious.
G.I. events and other risk flactors known to be associated with peptic ulcer disease, such as alcabolism, smoking, etc., no risk flactors (e.g., age, sex) have been associated with increased risk. Elderly or debitated patients seem to tolerate ulceration or bleeding less well than other individuals, and most spontaneous reports of fatal G.I. events are in this population. Studies to date are inconclusive concerning the relative risk of visions in SAIO probably carry a greater risk of these reactions. Although controlled clinical tools showing this do not exist in impost cases. In considering the use of relatively large doses (within the recommended dosage range), sufficient benefit should be anticipated to offset the potential increased risk of G.I. toxicity.

Hepatic Effects
As with other NSAIOs, elevations of one or more fiver tests may occur during diclofenac therapy. These laboratory abnormalities may progress, may remain unchanged, or may be transfern with continued therapy Borderine elevations (i.e., less than 3 times the ULN (= the Upper Limit of the Normal rangel), or greater elevations of fransamnases occurred in about 15% of diciblenac-freated patients. Of the hepatic enzymes, ALT (SGPT) is the one recommended for the monitoring of liver injury in climical trials, meaningful elevations (i.e., more than 3 times the ULN) of AST (SGOT) (ALT was not measured in all studies) occurred in about 2% of

In that open-fabel study, a higher incidence of biordraine (less than 3 times the ULN), moderate (3.9 times the ULN), and marked (3-8 times the ULN) and marked (3-8 times the ULN) in advanced to the development of ALT or AST was observed in gatents receiving diciolens when compared to other NSAUGs. Physicians should measure transammases periodically in patients receiving long-term therapy with dictofenac, because severe hepatotixicity may develop without a prodrome of distinguishing symptoms. The optimum times for making the first and subsequent transammase measurements are not known. In the largest U.S. Iriad Jopen-labelt had involved 3700 patients monitored first at weeks and 1200 patients monitored again at 24 weeks, almost all meaningful elevations in transammase were detected before patients became symptomatic. In 42 of the 51 glottens all first's who developed marked transammase elevations, abnormal tests occurred during the furst 2 monitors of therapy with dictofenase. Based on this experience, if dictofenase is used chromatally, the first transammase measurement should be made no later than 8 weeks after the start of dictofenac treatment. As with other NSAIOS, if

General
Allergic Reactions: As with other NSAIOs, allergic reactions including anaphylaxis have been reported with dicidenac. Specific allergic manifestations consisting of swelling of eyeldis, lips, pharym, and raym, unicatia, asthma, and bronchospasin, sometimes with a concomitant fall in blood pressure issever at times) have been observed in clinical trials and/or the markship eyepenace with dicidenae. Anaphylaxis has rarely been reported from foreign sources; in U.S. clinical trials with dicidenae in over 6000 patients, 1 case of anaphylaxis was reported. In controlled clinical trials, allergic reactions have been observed at an incidence of 0.5%. These reactions can occur without prior exposure to the drug.

Floid Reliention and Eleman: Fluid releation and edema have been observed in some patients taking dicidenae. Therefore, as with other NAIOS, additional trials and Eleman: Fluid reliention and edema have been observed in some patients taking dicidenae. Therefore, as with other NAIOS, additional based and the controlled or patients taking dicidenae.

dictofenac should be used with caution in patients with a history of cardiac decompensation, hypertension, or other conditions predisposing to fluid

Renal Effects: As a class, NSA IOs have been associated with renal papillary necrosis and other abnormal renal pathology in long-term administration to animals. In oral dictiferiac studies in animals, some evidence of renal loxicity was noted, Isolated incidents of papilitary necross were observed in a few animals at high doses (20-120 mg/kg) in several baboon subacute studies. In patients treated with dictiferiac, rare cases of interstifial nephritis and papilitary necross have been reported (see ADVERSE EACTIONS).

A second form of renal toxicity, generally associated with INSAIDs, is seen in patients with conditions leading to a reduction in renal blood flow or blood volume, where renal prostaglandins have a supportive order in the maintenance of renal perfusion in Inhises patients, administration of an ASAD results in a dose-dependent decrease in prostaglandin synthesis and, secondanly, in a reduction of renal blood flow, which may precipitate overt renal failure. Patients at greatest risk of this reaction are, those with impaired renal function, heart failure, liver dysfunction, those taking diurelos, and the elderly

Laboratory Tests

Because senous G. If clotedness is used chronically, patients should also be instructed to report any signs and symptoms that implified be due to hepatiologicity of dictolenac; these symptoms may become evident between visits when periodic liver laboratory tests are performed. (see WARNINGS, Henatic Effects).

Ong Interactions
Applin: Concomitant administration of dicolenac and aspinn is not recommended because dicolenac is displaced from its binding sites during the concomitant administration of aspirin, resulting in lower plasma concentrations, peak plasma levels, and AUC values Anticoagulants: While studies have not shown diciolenactio interact with anticoagulants of the warfainintype, caution should be exercised, nonetheless, insert actions have been seem without her ISABLOS. Because prostaglations play air important role in hemostass, and NSAIOs affect platelet function as well, concurrent therapy with all NSAIOs, including diciolenac, and warfann requires close monotoring of patients to be certain that no change in their antiologished dosage is required.

Gligotin, Metholizzate, Cyclosporine: Oxidenac, fike other NSAIOs, may affect renal prostaglandins and increase the toxicity of certain drugs. Ingestion of diciblenacing my increase semin concarrations of digious and methoticeate and increase cyclosporine's nephrotoxicity. Patients who begin taking diciblenacior who increase their diciblenac dose or any other NSAIO while taking digoxin, methoticeate, or cyclosporine may develop texicity characteristics for these drugs. They should be observed closely, particularly if renal function is impaired. In the case of digoxin, serum levels should be Statistically significant changes in prothrombin and partial thromboglastin himse have been reported in normal volunteers. The mean changes were observed to be less than 1 second in both instances, however, and air unkely to be clinically important. Oicloferact is a prostaglandin synthesise inhibitor, however, and all drugs that inhibit prostaglandin synthesis interfere with platelet function to some degree, therefore, patients who may be adversely affected by such an action should be carefully observed.

There are no adequate and well-controlled studies in pregnant women. Orciblenac should be used during pregnancy only if the benefits to the mother justify the potential risk to the letus.

Pregnancy Calegory 8: Reproduction studies have been performed in mice given diciblenac sodium (up to 20 mg/kg/day or 60 mg/m²/day) and in rats and rabbits given dictionals socium (up to 10 mg/kg/day or 60 mg/m²/day for rats, and 60 mg/m²/day for rabbits), and have revealed no evidence of teratogenicity despite the induction of maternal toxicity and fetal toxicity. In rats, maternally toxic doses were associated with dystocia, protonged gestation, reduced fetal weights and growth, and reduced fetal survival. Outclenac has been shown to cross the placental barrier in mice and rats

Labor and Delivery
The effects of dictioners on labor and delivery in pregnant women are unknown. Because of the known effects of prostaglandin-inhibiting drugs on the fetal cardiovascular system (closure of ductios arteriosus), use of disolence during late pregnancy should be avoided and, as with other nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, it is possible that diciolence may inhibit utenne confraction.

Now, stronger and more efficient than ever, we salute our employees. They have made us the industry leader that we are today. Poised for the 21st century, we will continue to provide the finest home health services available... anywhere.

Conjoint Report

To the North Carolina Medical Society and the North Carolina Commission for Health Services

Ronald H. Levine, MD, MPH

Editor's note: This report is an adaptation of State Health Director Dr. Levine's address to the Medical Society at its Annual Meeting in Greensboro November 4, 1994.

I present here some brief remarks on the state of our health, paying particular attention to infectious diseases and the health of North Carolina's children. In his 1894 report to the Society, my predecessor, Dr. Richard Lewis, commented:

"The sanitary sky to the eastward was overcast with the dark and lurid clouds of cholera...yellow fever had appeared...almost at our doors...(and) small pox...(had begun)...to spread over the country..."

One hundred years later, you might ask "Haven't we beaten all of the important infectious causes of significant morbidity and mortality into submission?" "Can we now direct our resources for prevention to injury and chronic disease?" Apparently not! We now face the problem of emerging infectious diseases — those of whose human incidence has increased within the past two decades or threatens to in the near future. A highly virulent strain of E. coli that wreaked havoc in the Pacific Northwest is present and causing illness in our state. In October 1994, the Health Commission added "E. coli 157" to the list of officially reportable diseases, saddening all lovers of medium-rare hamburgers. Private and public health practitioners struggle together to deal with newly recognized infectious agents and syndromes like AIDS, Lyme disease, hantavirus, and legionellosis.

We must also battle the resurgence of old infectious threats in new guises, like drug-resistant tuberculosis and gonorrhea. Diseases we thought had disappeared have once again reared their ugly heads. There has been a cholera epidemic in Africa, bubonic plague in India, diphtheria in Russia—and plenty of pertussis in North Carolina.

AIDS and HIV Infection

Recently North Carolina passed the 5,000 mark in reported A1DS cases and many more thousands of North Carolinians are infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). The finding that 79% of new HIV infections are in blacks is troubling.

Heterosexual contact as a risk factor increased from 13% to 18% of all reported cases between 1992 and 1994. Heterosexual contact is the major risk factor for women, especially black women. Thus, confidential testing, with effective contact notification and counseling, becomes a more important weapon in this battle.

I am particularly concerned about HIV prevalence among pregnant women in North Carolina. A recent study showed a 70% reduction in prenatal transmission of the infection when HIV-positive mothers were given azidothymidine (AZT) during pregnancy. Therefore I am considering recommending that physicians be required to offer HIV testing as part of routine screening in pregnancy (see related article on page 102).

Our Children's Health

North Carolina continues to lag behind many other states in child health indicators. We have a poor immunization rate, a high infant mortality rate, a high teenage pregnancy rate, a high rate of teenage substance abuse, poor physical fitness, and a high rate of death and disability due to injury. Too few of our children, particularly adolescents, receive routine preventive health care. More children, their families, and caregivers need to be exposed to and act on ways to prevent premature death and disability by improving their physical fitness and nutrition and choosing healthy habits.

Dr. Levine is State Health Director, NC Department of Environment, Health, and Natural Resources, P.O. Box 27687, Raleigh 27611-7687.

"We must make certain that a comprehensive system of preventive and primary care is available and accessible to all children."

The well-being of our children is not solely a health issue, yet health concerns are significant. Giving a child a "smart start" in life is possible only if the child is healthy. We must make certain that a comprehensive system of preventive and primary care is available and accessible to all children.

Working together, we have made some progress. The percentage of pregnant women who seek care in their first trimester has increased; the percentage of women who receive no prenatal care has declined. North Carolina's Medicaid program has been expanded to cover more poor women and babies and to support intensive nutrition and psychosocial counseling for appropriate prenatal clients.

The Rural Obstetrical Care Incentive Program, which subsidizes the malpractice premiums of those who provide obstetrical services to low-income patients in underserved areas, has expanded to cover 195 physicians and 19 certified nurse-midwives. This is the largest number of providers ever supported by this program. Providers who received ROCI funding delivered more than one in five of North Carolina's children last year.

Our newborn screening program identified 125 infants in 1993. All started treatment regimens within days of identification, and follow-up care has saved them and their families untold suffering.

Immunization

A few years ago, we discovered that more than 40% of our state's two-year-olds were vulnerable to preventable contagious diseases because they had not received all appropriate immunizations. In 1993, we launched a large-scale, statewide effort to improve our immunization rates. Governor Hunt proposed, and the legislature supported, the provision of free vaccines to all physicians and clinics that care for children. A vaccine distribution center in Raleigh ships approximately $1.2 million worth of vaccine to providers across the state each month. Local health departments have responded by extending their hours and by offering immunizations at outlying sites within the community. We have developed and distributed billboard advertising, posters, brochures, and public service announcements, and the private sector has enthusiastically joined the crusade for better immunization rates. Organizations such as Kiwanis and the Masons, and companies like McDonald's, Hardee's, and Burger King have lent their support. And a close working relationship between private physicians and the public health community is one reason we anticipate an improved immunization rate in 1995.

Fitness and Health

The overwhelming consensus is that the nation's youth are in extremely poor physical condition. A recently tested sample of North Carolina youth showed significantly higher levels of body fat, lower flexibility, and less aerobic conditioning than their national counterparts. Overall, physical education teachers don't have enough interaction with our children to make a difference in their fitness levels.

Parents seldom exercise with their children, so we must encourage schools to provide quality physical education programs that will improve the fitness levels of North Carolina's youth. We must support parents who engage in family activities that include physical exercise like bicycling, nature hikes, or visiting the local swimming pool.

There are four major target groups for our message within each community. These are the groups who have the greatest influence in promoting children's health-related lifestyles:

- Children and their peers must be targeted with age-appropriate messages and activities. Children often influence each other and are good conduits for taking home health promotion messages.
- Parents, grandparents and other family members must be targeted because they are primary caregivers and provide fundamental role models. As the children's cough syrup commercial states, "Dr. Mom" is the one who provides most of the health care for a child, makes the food choices, and sets the activity levels.

"The benefits of...health promotion and disease prevention programs go beyond...potential savings in medical care costs."

- Teachers and other caregivers serve as role models and supervise much of the daily activities of children. In today's world, children may spend significantly more time with adults other than their parents and are subject to considerable outside influence on and control of their lifestyles.
- Community providers and organizations— the very ambience of the community itself—directly and indirectly affect the lives and lifestyles of our children.

The benefits of community-based health promotion and disease prevention programs go beyond improved health and potential savings in medical care costs. A healthy community enhances the state's economic development and prosperity. Local leaders recognize that a healthy community is good business. Every North Carolina community wants to be a "good place to raise children."

How We Can Help

To improve our children's health, the state's doctors and the Medical Society must:

- ✓ Advocate increased funding and laws that ensure better health and protection for our children.
- Seek out and participate in local health coalitions in our communities.

Offer our expertise and assistance to local health departments, schools, day cares, and head start programs.

One hundred years ago at the Society's Annual Meeting, Dr. J.B. Powers of Wake Forest said: "Preventive medicine is like a luminous sun; it is just peering above our eastern horizon and it is to grow in magnitude and splendor as it ascends toward the meridian and shines down upon the whole people its genial rays of light and blessings. [A]nd back from them will go the vociferous shout of applause to those who have borne the heat and burden of the day in the accomplishment of the one grand end toward which we have been slowly marching—freedom from disease."

The great thing about North Carolina medicine, public and private, is that we have always and will continue to work together, arm in arm, to attain that freedom from disease toward which we all aspire.

Promoting Public Health: Who Does It and Why?

by J. Dale Simmons, MD

For years, when I was a primary care practitioner, I tried to practice good health promotion and disease prevention. On occasions I think I succeeded. I kept good immunization records, discouraged the use of tobacco, and told patients to exercise regularly and control their weight. In the early years, when I delivered babies, I talked to expectant mothers about the importance of prenatal care, what to expect in labor and delivery, and how the newborn would grow and develop. Patients with diabetes came to my office early in the morning for blood-sugar determinations; while they waited for the results I showed them educational tapes on nutrition, proper dosage of insulin, foot care, eye care, and the importance of exercise. In the final years of my practice, I told my patients to avoid (or quit using) tobacco products. I am sure I must have failed to recognize instances of domestic violence and child abuse, but I did uncover sexual dysfunction and learned the value of premarital and marital counseling.

I now know that what I was doing is called personal health promotion and disease prevention. I also now know that the population-based practice of community health promotion has the potential of yielding even greater dividends for the time and cost expended. Today, I practice a different kind of health promotion and disease prevention called public health. Its setting is altogether in the community.

Some health departments in this state provide a limited range of primary care in order to make access to such services available. Ease of transportation, evening clinic hours, and lower costs can improve accessibility, but the provision of such services leads many to think of health departments as primarily a care provider for poor people. In fact, few health departments choose to provide primary care. They do so by default. People in public health would rather expend their energies to prevent disease and promote good health. They know that this is best done at the community level where it can be cost effective and reach a greater population.

We know that over 50% of the causes of death have associated behavioral risk factors that could be changed, thereby increasing the quality of life significantly. The way we eat, exercise, and sleep; the way we abuse our bodies with drugs, alcohol, and tobacco have serious health consequences. The way we expose ourselves to unintentional injuries, the way we react to the warning signs of diseases such as cancer affects our health and our life expectancy. Habitual behaviors can all be changed, but less often (and the changes less sustained) when dealt with on a personal level rather than a community level.

Public health departments want to devote themselves to community health promotion. It is there that we will get the most benefit from the dollars spent. This means involving physicians, churches, schools, hospitals, health departments, civic clubs, and worksites in the tasks of health promotion. The use of focus groups and polling has become such a science that no one would promote a political campaign or sell a product without market research. Likewise, it would be foolish to spend scarce health dollars without good surveillance data and statistical analysis. We must study the financial resources, nutritional needs, and the barriers to health care if we are to succeed in improving the public health. Once we have the information from such studies and once the community has embraced the need for change and adopted interventions, institutionalization takes place, leading to longterm behavioral changes and improved health of the public.

Public health department people are specialists in community health promotion. That is their area of expertise, and that is where they want to work, alongside and synergistically with private health care providers.

Manuscript Preparation

Prepare papers according to the "Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals" (N Engl J Med 1991;324:424-8) with these exceptions: 1) no abstract; 2) no running title; and 3) report measurements in metric units; use of the International System of Units (SI) is optional. Covers letters must state that the manuscript is not under consideration for publication elsewhere.

Submit a cover letter and a 3 1/2-inch hard disk or 5 1/4-inch floppy disk (protect with cardboard) with the text written in MS DOS compatible format (WordPerfect, Microsoft Word, Displaywrite, or ASCII), and one hard copy of the text. (No disks are necessary for Letters to the Editor unless lengthy.) Double-space text with one-inch margins. Include address and phone and fax numbers of the corresponding author.

Submit illustrations, in duplicate, as color 35mm slides or glossy photographs, or as black-and-white glossy photographs (protect with cardboard). Label with author's name, note position in the text, and indicate image orientation. Do not write on the backs of prints. Type legends separately. Tables should be typed, double-spaced, one to a page. Tables must have titles and Arabic numbers.

Minimize references (no more than 15, if possible). The "Uniform Requirements" cited above contains reference format. Authors are responsible for the accuracy and pertinence of citations. Avoid abbreviations if possible, or keep to a minimum. Completely define abbreviations at the first usage in the text.

Manuscript Editing

A medically qualified editor reads all manuscripts, and most are also reviewed by members of the NC Medical Society. Decisions to publish or not are made by the editors, advised by peer reviewers.

We encourage a relatively informal writing style since we believe this improves communication. Imagine yourself talking with your audience—as long as this doesn't lead you to scientific or linguistic inaccuracy. Be brief, clear, simple, and precise.

We edit accepted manuscripts for clarity, style, and conciseness. Except for letters, authors receive a copy of the edited manuscript for approval before publication.

Authors retain copyright to articles in the NC Medical Journal, but the NC Medical Society copyrights the contents of each issue. Requests for permission to reprint all or part of an article must be submitted in writing to the address below and negotiated with the author and editor. Reprinted material must carry a credit line identifying that it appeared in the NC Medical Journal. Address manuscripts and correspondence to:

Pediatric Hearing Evaluation and Treatment

Maureen Cassidy Riski, MEd, Amelia F. Drake, MD, and Vincent Carrasco, MD

Adequate hearing during the first two years of life is essential for normal language and speech development. However, many infants suffer from congenital or acquired hearing impairment during this critical period. Congenital sensorineural hearing loss affects seven out of every 2,000 newborn infants in the United States.1 Although there are several methods available for identifying hearing impairment during the first year of life, the average age at which such identification occurs is 24 months, and most children do not receive amplification until six to eight months later.² About 20%-30% of hearing-impaired children have acquired sensorineural hearing loss that occurs after birth. They are not identified until age six or seven, after they've entered school. The negative effects of hearing loss on a child's speech, language, education, and socialization can be minimized with early identification and remediation.3

In this paper we discuss hearing assessment in newborns and young infants, describe the interdisciplinary Pediatric

Pediatric Hearing Healthcare Team

Because of the need for a comprehensive program to assess the hearing of newborns, infants and young children, the Pediatric Hearing Healthcare Team was established at the University of North Carolina Hospitals in 1990. This multidisciplinary team has members from pediatric audiology, pediatric speech pathology, and pediatric otology. The PHHT is dedicated to the diagnosis and management of pediatric hearing impairment.

Hearing Assessment

Hearing sensitivity can be assessed in several ways, each with its advantages and disadvantages. Some methods elicit an electrophysiological response from the patient and require no active cooperation. Others require a behavioral response. In an appropriate test environment and with appropriate conditioning of the patient to the task, children as young as six months of age can be assessed by behavioral methods.

Auditory brainstem response (ABR): This objective, electrophysiological test estimates auditory sensitivity. An electroencephalogram (EEG) is obtained during auditory stimulation at variable intensity levels. The portion of the EEG synchronized to the acoustic stimulus is averaged by computer and the resulting characteristic waveform (representing activity from the cochlea through to the mid-brainstem) is used to assess hearing acuity in newborns and other patients who are difficult to test. ABR requires no cooperation from the patient, and can be performed under sedation or even general anesthesia. The click stimulus most often used in ABR has a frequency in the 2000-4000 Hz range. The ABR can help describe a patient's hearing for the high frequency range, but further testing is often necessary in order to obtain a complete description of the patient's hearing. On average the test takes 20-40 minutes. It does not give an indication of central auditory processing ability, nor how sound is perceived by the patient.

Otoacoustic emissions: This recently developed technique tests hearing in the neonatal population. Otoacoustic emissions (OAEs) are extremely low-intensity sounds generated by the outer hair cells of a healthy cochlea. Their presence indicates normal cochlear function.⁴ OAEs are measured by a probe assembly coupled to a computer-controlled analyzer. The probe contains a miniature loudspeaker to present evoking stimuli and a small microphone to detect the emission.⁵ In the absence of external or middle ear abnormalities, evoked OAEs can be recorded from almost all normally functioning cochleas, including those of infants. Transient evoked OAEs require five to 10 minutes to record, and are not present in patients with hearing loss greater than 30 dB. OAEs may help in assessing the hearing of infants and difficult-to-test patients.

Behavioral audiometry: This technique is used on subjects older than six months of age or when infants can be conditioned to respond to stimuli. There are several forms of behavioral audiometry. Visual reinforcement audiometry is frequently used to evaluate children up to age 2 1/2 years. The child is conditioned to turn or look to the source of a sound by reinforcing the response with an animated toy located near the sound source. Threshold information can be obtained for all speech frequencies (500-4000 Hz). The threshold is determined by recording the minimum sound intensity that reliably causes the child to turn his or her head. Children aged three to five years are assessed by play audiometry in which the child is conditioned to drop blocks in a bucket in response to pure tones they perceive.

Tympanometry: The tympanic membrane and the ossicles transmit sound from air to the fluid environment of the inner ear. The mechanical functioning of the ear is therefore extremely important and is routinely evaluated for its ability to transmit sound. Stiff tympanic membranes reduce sound transmission and may indicate middle ear effusion or otosclerosis in which the stapes footplate is fixed.

Conversely, tympanic membranes that are very flaccid may indicate disarticulated middle ear bones. The evaluation of the physiologic function of the middle ear is performed using immittance audiometry or tympanometry. Tympanometry, used in conjunction with air conduction (a free air test of hearing) and bone conduction (in which the cochlea is stimulated directly with a bone oscillator) audiometry, can establish whether there is a conductive hearing loss.

Interpreting Test Procedures

The responses from the various test procedures are plotted as an audiogram (Fig. 1). Frequency information is plotted along the horizontal axis and the intensity of the auditory signal, represented as the decibel scale, along the vertical axis. The threshold of hearing is obtained for octave interval frequencies from 250-8000 Hz in each ear. Threshold scores less than 15 dB represent normal hearing; those from 16 dB to 25 dB, a slight hearing loss; those from 26 dB to 40 dB, a mild loss; from 41 dB to 55 dB a moderate loss; from 56 dB to 70 dB a moderately severe hearing loss; from 71 dB to 90 dB a severe hearing loss; and those from 90 dB and above a profound hearing loss.⁶

The consequences of hearing loss are most obvious in children with severe or profound hearing loss—a group that fortunately accounts for only a small percentage of all hearing-impaired children. Most children with hearing impairment have less visible sequelae associated with mild-moderate hearing loss in one or both ears. These individuals may display social and academic deficits if their hearing losses remain unidentified and untreated through the language-learning years.⁷

Assessment of risk factors for hearing loss represent the first recommended level of screening (Table 1).8 A recent study found that parents of children at high risk suspect a problem approximately five months earlier and obtain a hearing test seven months earlier than parents of children without known risk factors for hearing loss.9 A high-risk register can be of substantial assistance in the early identification of hearing loss by alerting parents and other caregivers. On the other hand, although the listed risk factors are associated with hearing loss, the register fails to identify 50% of those with hearing loss. 10

Recently there has been a call to screen all neonates so that no infant with hearing impairment will go undetected. Advocates of this approach are proponents of the relatively new method of otoacoustic emissions, described earlier. This method holds promise as a fast and inexpensive screening tool, but not all facilities can afford the necessary equipment or personnel needed to perform hearing screening.

Partly because universal screening of hearing is not available, there is a population of children with undetected hearing loss. It is imperative that primary care providers know and use valid methods to detect hearing deficits in children. In order to identify and rehabilitate hearing-impaired children, the care provider must know the expected norms for speech and hearing development. During the evaluation of pediatric patients, communication milestones should be assessed and the possibility of a handicapping hearing loss investigated whenever a child fails to meet the developmental guidelines shown in Table 2. Thereafter, referral to a PHHT may be appropriate.

Patient Profiles

The UNC Hospitals' Hearing and Speech Center logs approximately 5,000 patient visits per year; more than 40% are by pediatric patients. Between 1985 and 1992, 145 pediatric patients were documented to have handicapping hearing loss and were fitted with amplification, on the average within two months after confirmation of the hearing loss. Eighty of the 145 patients were referred by a medical physician, usually an otolaryngologist; 26 by the patient's family; 11 by school systems; 15 by speech pathology; and 14 by the UNC Oral Facial Cleft Palate Center.

technology, an increasing population of pediatric patients, and an increased awareness by physicians and caregivers of the importance of hearing loss. Increased awareness is fostered by hearing screening programs for infants, educational programs for hospital staff, increased public awareness of risk factors, and increasing community recognition of management options.

Fig. 3 shows the age distribution of the 145 pediatric patients fitted with amplification. Nearly one-third (48) received amplification before age three. Most proponents of the "critical period" for language development feel that amplification before age three is vital because up to that age auditory signals are optimally received and used for important prelinguistic activities, but once this stage has passed, the effective utilization of these signals declines.12 Of interest is the "jump" in the number of hearing aid fittings in patients aged four to six. This represents detection that follows enrollment and subsequent hearing screening of children in preschool. Overall, 10%-15% of children fail hearing screening at school.

The greatest number (33) of children receiving amplification were over eight years old. There were 12 with a unilateral hearing loss, 17 with a bilateral mild to mild-to-moderate bilateral hearing loss, and four with moderate bilateral hearing loss. After 1989 patients with a unilateral loss were given amplification because of concerns that even unilateral hearing loss can be an educational handicap (Brookhouser et al¹³ reported a significant effect of unilateral hearing loss on educational achievement, and linguistic and auditory perceptual development of children). Therefore, pediatric patients with unilateral hearing loss who display delays in those areas are usually given hearing aids to help them get full benefit from their educational experiences. Examination of the patient's educational history as well as evaluation by a speech or language pathologist can assist in the determination of whether to fit a patient with unilateral loss.

Etiology of Hearing Loss

The cause of the hearing loss is not always clear; 57% of our 145 patients could not be assigned a known cause for their hearing loss (Fig. 4). This is consistent with the general literature, which suggests that etiology is unknown in 50% of hearing-impaired pediatric patients. On the other hand, 43% of the population did have a known factor in the history, often one that led to the initial referral and subsequent identification.

Types and Degree of Hearing Loss

Of the 129 patients fitted with binaural hearing aids, 95 had sensorineural hearing loss, 30 had conductive hearing loss, and four had a mixed hearing loss. Atresia of ear structures, congenital middle ear bone disease, perforation of the tympanic membrane, or chronic otitis media all caused conductive hearing loss that required hearing aid fitting. Sixteen patients had unilateral hearing loss.

Of the 129 patients, those with a moderate or moderate-severe hearing loss made up the largest portion (62), followed by those with a mild or mild-tomoderate hearing loss (31), those with a severe loss (20), and the profoundly impaired (13). Current literature supports the need for amplification even in those with mild hearing loss. A hearing loss of "just" 20-30 dB will have a significant impact on communication and language learning14 because, although vowel sounds are heard clearly, voiceless consonants may be missed. Children with a mild hearing loss routinely do well with appropriate amplification, and thus should not be ignored. Upfold15 forecasts a new emphasis on the fitting of hearing aids to children with mild or conductive hearing impairments.

Concerns and Compliance

Parents are often worried about the cost of hearing aids and how to care for them. Parents also may not understand the importance of amplification or may even deny that there is any problem. The audiologist's role in helping parents has a significant impact on the overall management of a child with hearing loss. That role should include education, guidance, and counseling, since the parents' attitude regarding amplification may be the single most important factor in the successful use of a hearing aid by the hearing-impaired child. In addition, the family physician, pediatrician, otolaryngologist, and speech pathologist can all help in the adjustment period. Medical personnel should make themselves available for questions that may arise.

"When a child needs amplification it is imperative to act quickly and provide remediation in order to ensure normal linguistic and cognitive development."

Conclusions

The identification of hearing loss in children, even infants, is extremely important. Familiarity with the developmental norms for speech, language, and hearing allows appropriate referrals to hearing professionals such as those members of the PHHT who are equipped with sophisticated methods for diagnosing hearing disorders and who routinely fit hearing aids to pediatric patients. When a child needs amplification, it is imperative to act quickly and provide remediation in order to ensure normal linguistic and cognitive development. A PHHT can play an important role in parental understanding and acceptance of the child's hearing impairment, and guidance throughout the habilitation.

The Carolina Children's Communicative Disorders Program

An Opportunity for North Carolina's Children

William R. Blythe, MD, Carolyn J. Brown, MS, CCC-SLP/A, Douglas E. Henrich, MD, W. Paul Biggers, MD, and Harold C. Pillsbury, III, MD

The Carolina Children's Communicative Disorders Program (CCCDP) was established in 1992 to help provide communication devices and services to North Carolina children from low-income families. The program provides high-quality hearing aids, vibrotactile devices, FM systems, cochlear implants and other communication devices, as well as professional and physician services to needful children. It is funded by a grant from the North Carolina Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources, and operates out of the Otolaryngology/Head and Neck Surgery (OHNS) clinic at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. North Carolina residents less than 21 years old are eligible for services, based on determination of medical and financial need. Once accepted, the patient is provided with state-of-the-art communication devices and professional services, all funded by the CCCDP.

Origin of the CCCDP

The Carolina Children's Communicative Disorders Program was the dream of Dr. W. Paul Biggers, professor of OHNS at UNC. Dr. Biggers encountered a number of young patients who needed hearing devices but did not have enough money to buy them. He also found that cochlear implantation was underutilized because insurance coverage was incomplete and inconsistent. Dr. Biggers and Dr. Harold C. Pillsbury, III, chief of the Division of Otolaryngology at UNC decided to look for a solution. They discussed the situation with prominent otologists at Duke, Bowman Gray, and East Carolina university medical centers, and found consensus that many of North Carolina's hearing-impaired children were unable to obtain needed devices and services due to their limited financial resources. As a result, the CCCDP was begun.

The idea of the program was straightforward. It should be open to all children in North Carolina with hearing impairments or other communication disorders. Acceptance into the program would be determined by financial need of the patient and family. Priority would be given to the most underprivileged children, but financial criteria would be flexible enough to allow inclusion of as many patients as funding would accommodate. Because of Dr. Biggers' central role in the conception and organization of the CCCDP, it would be based at UNC-Chapel Hill.

lature. The proposal was supported by Dr. Jerry W. Wiley, medical consultant to the Division of Maternal and Child Health of the Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources, and this hastened its approval. Other important and supportive individuals include: Bob Eubanks, past chairman of the UNC Board of Trustees; Dennis Wicker, lieutenant governor of North Carolina; and Howard Lee, former mayor of Chapel Hill and current NC state senator. The program was approved in July 1992, with disbursement of funds beginning in October.

A crucial part of the success of the program was the recruitment of its director, Carolyn J. Brown. Ms. Brown, a certified audiologist and speech pathologist, as well as a national expert in cochlear implantation, had been a staff member at the House Ear Institute in Los Angeles, California, for many years and gained expertise in cochlear implant evaluation, programming, and rehabilitation. In 1989 she began work in Dr. House's private practice in Newport Beach, and continued to expand her experience with cochlear implantation there until March 1993, when she became director of the CCCDP.

Ms. Brown's central role in the success of the CCCDP cannot be overemphasized. Her duties include patient recruitment and approval, budgeting and fund allocation, and coordination of the efforts of the many involved professionals. She is exclusively responsible for the cochlear implantation program, performing preoperative evaluation, cochlear implant programming, and post-implant audiological and speech rehabilitation. She works with each child's school system so that patients are provided with appropriate educational services.

Operation

The CCCDP employs three full-time staff members; the program director, a social research assistant, and a clinical fellow in audiology. Audiology and speech pathology services at UNC are used as needed. Fees for services are billed to the patient's insurance as applicable. Fees and hospital charges beyond or in lieu of insurance coverage are significantly discounted, and the residual is paid by the CCCDP. As a result, patients get high-level professional services despite their limited personal funds. In addition, all insurance-covered fees generated by the cochlear implant program are channeled back into the CCCDP for future use.

Physician services provided at UNC are handled in a similar manner. Each patient is evaluated by an otolaryngologist upon acceptance into the program. Medical evaluation and surgical procedures are available to CCCDP patients through the division of OHNS. Drs. Pillsbury, Vincent C. Carrasco, and Amelia F. Drake oversee the treatment of these patients and perform cochlear implantation. Again, patients who have medical insurance are billed for applicable services, and any charges above or in lieu of insurance coverage are substantially reduced and paid by the CCCDP.

Communication devices are funded by the program. The cost of cochlear implants are billed as a part of the hospital charges associated with the implantation procedure. Hearing aids, vibrotactile devices, FM systems, or other communication devices that may be needed are ordered from the manufacturers by the program director. This offers a financial benefit to the program and recipients because most manufacturers offer discounts for large purchases. The CCCDP pays for these devices and, if the patient is not being cared for at UNC, has them sent directly to the referring audiologist, speech pathologist, or appropriate professional for disbursement to the patient. CCCDP patients are thus furnished with state-of-the-art communication devices without expenditure of personal funds. Referring audiologists or other professionals may charge a fee for fitting the device and this is not funded by the CCCDP.

Qualification

Entry into the program is designed to accommodate as many patients as funding will allow. Because the program is underwritten by the North Carolina Legislature, all patients must be residents of North Carolina and all must be less than 21 years old. Financial criteria for entry are flexible, with priority given to those in greatest need. Financial considerations include, but are not limited to, the following: 1) gross family income, 2) number of dependents, 3) inability to finance the proposed device or service from other state-funded health care programs, 4)

Commentary

by Debara Tucci, MD, and Joseph C. Farmer, Jr., MD

The article by Blythe et al outlines an excellent, although still too limited, state-funded program to help to some of the hearing-impaired children of North Carolina. We urgently need such comprehensive services statewide. Currently, 32 states other than North Carolina fund comprehensive hearing health care (including cochlear implants) through Medicaid. All of these states provide coverage for implantation and rehabilitation of children. Several other states consider funding on the basis of individual case review. No such coverage is provided by Medicaid or any other state agency in North Carolina.

One reason for the reluctance of Medicaid agencies to fund implants is the costs involved, particularly the cost of the device. However, two detailed analyses (one from the Johns Hopkins University and the other from the University of California at San Diego) have demonstrated a very favorable cost-benefit ratio. It costs less to educate a child who can be mainstreamed into a hearing classroom, and improved hearing enhances the individual's lifetime income-earning potential.

Studies show that the earlier a child is implanted, the more successful the rehabilitation. This highlights the importance of early intervention, a goal that can only be achieved in a system that provides expeditious review of qualification for rehabilitation services. In general, this cannot be achieved by review on a case-by-case basis.

Comprehensive services for hearing-impaired children and adults, including cochlear implantation, are available from several centers throughout North Carolina, including Duke University Medical Center, NC Baptist Hospital, and from private otologists in Charlotte and Greensboro. Evaluation and postoperative rehabilitation of patients with cochlear implants are extensive, and require many trips to the implant center. An all-inclusive method of providing these critical services to children would enable families to pursue care without the inconvenience of travelling to a single location in the state and without the need to establish a new relationship with new patient-care providers.

We strongly urge our state's leaders to respond to the challenge of providing state-of-the-art hearing rehabilitation. This would enhance the quality of life of profoundly hearing-impaired children and adults in North Carolina.

number of children in the family with communication disorders, and 5) extenuating circumstances, such as other medical expenses. Patients are accepted on the recommendation of the program and medical directors, depending on the availability of funds and confirmation of the need for devices or services by the program director and medical consultants. The CCCDP does not fund the replacement of currently adequate and functional devices.

Results

The CCCDP has been in full operation since November 1992. Twenty-two patients were enrolled between November 1992, and March 1993, when the program director began her full-time work. Since then another 175 patients have been enrolled, giving a total of 197 patients by November 1994. More than 250 hearing aids and devices have been ordered and disbursed, and 21 cochlear implants have been fully or partially funded by the program (another eight patients are awaiting cochlear implantation).

During the first two years of operation, 42% of patients were referred from central North Carolina; 22% from western North Carolina; and 35% from the eastern part of the state. We want to emphasize that this program is designed to provide equal opportunity for all children in North Carolina. Because it is headquartered in Chapel Hill, we expect ease of travel and referral patterns to produce a slight preponderance of patients from the central portion of the state. This should balance out as professionals across the state become more familiar with the program.

Summary

The CCCDP provides devices and services to underprivileged children with communication disorders. Since its organization, the program has helped 197 children, including 21 given cochlear implants, and has disbursed 258 hearing aids or devices. It is a cost-efficient program that has potential to help many of our state's needful children. We solicit referrals from all NC physicians, audiologists, speech pathologists, educators, and other professionals. Applications and financial forms will be furnished on request. Contact: Carolyn J. Do Exercise and Weight Loss Reduce Blood Pressure in Patients with Mild Hypertension?

James A. Blumenthal, PhD, Elizabeth Towner Thyrum, PhD, Elizabeth Duffy Gullette, BA, Andrew Sherwood, PhD, and Robert Waugh, MD

Hypertension puts nearly 60 million people in the United States at increased risk for health problems and diseases such as stroke, coronary artery disease, and kidney failure.1 Medical therapy (diurctics, beta blockers, calcium channel blockers, or ACE inhibitors) can successfully lower blood pressure in many individuals, but pharmacologic treatment can be costly and may produce unwanted side effects that reduce treatment adherence and impair quality of life. Consequently, we and many others have been greatly interested in non-pharmacologic treatment of hypertension, especially the use of aerobic exercise. Because exercise improves physical and psychological functioning, aerobic exercises (such as walking, biking, and swimming) seem especially appropriate for patients with high blood pressure.

Anecdotal reports and clinical observations have convinced many clinicians that exercise is beneficial. Both the Joint National Committee on Detection, Evaluation, and Treatment of High Blood Pressure² and the World Health Organi-zation3 recommend exercising and modifying dietary habits to lower blood pressure. Nevertheless, despite the widely held belief that exercise is effective treatment for hypertension, formal studies provide mixed results about its efficacy. The inconsistencies arise, in part, because relatively few studies have directly compared exercise to either pharmacologic therapy or placebo in randomized, longitudinal trials. Furthermore, available studies have often failed to use adequately precise or comprehensive blood pressure assessments, nor have they investigated the mechanisms by which exercise reduces blood pressure. We review those studies here and call your attention to a new trial of exercise therapy for hypertension that we are beginning.

Empirical Research on Exercise and Hypertension

Several lines of evidence support the idea that repetitive aerobic exercise and increased physical activity may lessen hypertension. Epidemiologic studies show that physical fitness and physical activity are inversely related to risk of developing hypertension. Cross-sectional studies have shown that higher levels of fitness are associated with lower blood pressure.6 It is true that some studies have found a correlation between lower blood pressure and fitness only in subgroups of populations, such as women over age 50; or for leisure time physical activity but not for occupational activity; or for low intensity but not high intensity exercise; or when awake for low intensity but while asleep for moderate exercise. The results appear inconsistent because of methodological problems such as selection bias, or imprecise measurement of fitness and blood pressure, or lack of comparable exercise training protocols (different studies use different modes, intensity, frequency, and duration of exercise training).

Interventional studies that have examined the effects of exercise on hypertension have been limited by a lack of control groups or non-randomized designs. There are some randomized, controlled trials of exercise training in hypertensive patients, and these provide the most rigorous test of the hypothesis that exercise lowers blood pressure, but as Table 1, next page, shows, there is an inconsistent pattern of results. Even the studies that show blood pressure reduction with exercise are open to alternate interpretations.

In a study from Duke University, 799 sedentary, non-obese, non-medicated, middle-aged men and women were randomly assigned to one of three groups: 1) aerobic exercise training, 2) resistance training (anaerobic exercise), or 3) noexercise control (these subjects were placed on a waiting list for exercise). The aerobic exercise involved three supervised sessions per week of walking or jogging at an intensity calculated to utilize at least 70% of subjects' initial heart rate reserve. The resistance training group performed flexibility exercises and circuit weight training two to three times per week. Subjects in the waiting list control group were contacted every three weeks to ensure that they were not exercising. All subjects underwent comprehensive blood pressure assessment at baseline and after four months of treatment, including measurement of blood pressure in the clinic, in the laboratory during mental and exercise stress testing, and during 12- to 18-hour ambulatory blood pressure monitoring.

Subjects who performed regular aerobic exercise had a 16% improvement in aerobic capacity, but they did not have greater reductions in blood pressure than the other two groups. All subjects had about a 5 mm Hg reduction in blood pressure, including those in the non-exercise control group. However, subjects who had the greatest improvement in objectively measured fitness (VO₂max) had nearly twice as great a reduction in diastolic blood pressure as subjects with the least improvement in fitness level. This suggests that an intensive exercise program, possibly carried out over a longer time period, might more effectively lower blood pressure than low-to-moderate exercise.

In support of the idea that vigorous exercise is effective, Kelemen¹⁴ demonstrated that intensive aerobic exercise by hypertensive patients (to an intensity of 80%-85% heart rate reserve) was associated with a decrease in mean blood pressure from 145/97 to 133/84 mm Hg. He found no differences in the magnitude of the blood pressure reductions in patients taking antihypertensive drugs compared to those taking placebos. Unfortunately, the absence of a no-exercise control group makes it impossible to attribute the blood pressure reductions solely to exercise.

Madden et al carried out a similarly uncontrolled study, ¹⁵ and also found significant blood pressure reductions with high intensity exercise training. These studies suggest that intensive exercise, rather than low-to-moderate exercise, may lower blood pressure in hypertensive patients.

Interestingly, when we reexamined our Duke study data, we found that three variables significantly predicted blood pressure decreases: 1) larger improvements in aerobic capacity, 2) higher levels of perceived exertion during exercise training sessions, and 3) greater weight loss. We believe that a combination of intensive exercise training with a weight loss program may be an effective prescription for lowering blood pressure.

Empirical Research on Weight Loss and Hypertension

Most studies have not simultaneously assessed changes in exercise, weight, and dietary habits. Blood pressure reductions that have been attributed to exercise might have been the result of weight loss or changes in diet or both.

Several observational and interventional studies have looked at the effect of weight loss on hypertensive patients. As was the case with exercise, these studies have methodological limitations such as the uncontrolled use of anti-hypertensive medications, determination of blood pressure at a single clinic visit, or failure to consider changes in exercise behavior and nutrition. Only two studies have been conducted on unmedicated patients with mild hypertension and they gave contradictory results (Table 2, previous page). One study¹⁷ showed no effect but the other¹⁸ demonstrated that, after 21 weeks of treatment, subjects in the weight reduction group had a greater decline in diastolic blood pressure than subjects treated with placebo or metoprolol. However, blood pressure was determined at only one clinic visit, and neither exercise habits nor fitness levels were documented.

Table 2. Randomized trials of weight loss for treating hypertension

Study Haynes ¹⁷	N 40 men 14 women	Duration 24 weeks	Mean wgt. loss 4.1 kgs	Effect on BP No difference
MacMahon¹8	42 men 14 women	21 weeks	7.4 kgs	↓ DBP and SBP

We can say that exercise does not appear to produce significant weight loss unless diet is also modified. Most studies report decreases of <2 kg in body weight and <1%-2% in body fat in subjects who exercised from six weeks to two years.19 Exercise produces minimal changes in hip-to-waist circumference ratio, suggesting that body fat distribution is not greatly altered. However, exercise does appear to help maintain weight loss,20 and this may be important in sustaining blood pressure changes brought about by weight loss. In addition, exercise and diet may act synergistically to reduce body weight and improve aerobic capacity.

Summary

We conclude from our review that exercise and weight loss offer some promise as non-pharmacologic treatments for hypertension. Unfortunately, most available studies are methodologically unsound, and the mechanisms by which exercise lowers blood pressure are not known. The use of randomized controlled designs, precise and comprehensive measurements of blood pressure and fitness, and clearly described interventions will be necessary if we are to decide whether exercise and diet lower blood pressure in patients with hypertension. We are now about to embark on such a study (see sidebar) in hopes that it will provide a clear answer to the question of whether these non-pharmacologic treatments can help the large numbers of Americans (and North Carolinians) with high blood pressure.

A New Study of Exercise and Weight Loss in Hypertension

Under the auspices of a grant from the National Institutes of Health, we plan to measure and manipulate weight loss, dietary habits (sodium and fat intake), and exercise intensity in a clinical trial that will explore the mechanisms of non-pharmacologic blood pressure reductions. We hope to identify hypertensive individuals especially likely to benefit from exercise and weight loss.

Two hundred people with blood pressures 130-179/85-104 mm Hg, who are 10% to 60% overweight, and who exercise for <20 minutes <3 times/week, will be studied. Patients taking anti-hypertensive medications or other medications that might affect blood pressure (such as oral contraceptives, tricyclic antidepressants, or decongestants) must be off of the medications for at least three months before participating. All subjects will be assessed before treatment, following the six-month treatment program, and again six months after completing the program.

Assessments. Comprehensive blood pressure assessments, performed before and after the six-month treatment program, consist of four separate clinic visits (during each of which blood pressure is measured four times) over three weeks; monitoring of blood pressure and its hemodynamic determinants at rest and during mental stress (speech, tracing the shape of a star from its reflection in a mirror, cold pressor testing, and recall of an angry event); exercise stress testing; and ambulatory blood pressure monitoring (four blood pressure readings per hour) over 12 to 18 hours of a typical workday. Additional assessments include: exercise treadmill testing to determine cardiopulmonary fitness, echocardiogram to assess left ventricular structure and function, glucose tolerance test, serum lipid measurement, dietary assessments, and psychometric testing. Six months after completing treatment, subjects will undergo clinic blood pressure measurements, a third echocardiogram, and fill out follow-up questionnaires.

Treatment programs. After initial assessment, participants who desire and are able to participate will be randomly assigned to one of three groups:

- An aerobic exercise group, which will undertake four supervised sessions of aerobic exercise (at up to 85% of heart rate reserve) each week for six months at the Duke Center for Living.
- 2) An aerobic exercise and weight management group, which will undertake the same exercise program as above plus a weekly program providing a behavior modification approach to weight loss that will cover five areas: lifestyle, attitude, relationships, nutrition, and exercise.
- 3) A waiting list control group, which will maintain usual dietary and exercise habits for six months. After final assessments, waiting list subjects will be invited to participate in either treatment group 1 or 2 described above.
- 4) A non-random control group of individuals who are willing to undergo the assessments, but are unable to participate in the weekly exercise and diet programs.

Participants will not pay any fee to be included in the study. At the end of the study, test results will be made available to participants and, with permission, to their personal physicians. Anyone interested in participating or in further information may contact Beth Gullette at 919/684-5820.

A REVIEW OF THE DO-NOT-RESUSCITATE PROCESS Patricia K. Hodgson

To appreciate this article, you must first imagine that you are dying. Now read on.

Let's assume your doctor has told you the worst and you have spent some time coming to grips with it. We won't spend time on the things you do to get your affairs in order. We'll just deal with your health care toward the end of your life.

You continue to work and follow your normal routine for awhile, but soon you need medical help more and more often. Your problems are pain and the side effects of the medicines you must take. Your doctor helps with these problems, but new ones crop up frequently.

Finally, during one of your last hospital stays you and your doctor have another talk about all of this and about what is coming.

Ms. Hodgson is the Director of the Communications Office, Duke Data Bank for Cardiovascular Disease, Duke Medical Center, Durham, NC 27710.

Taking control of the end of your life

You ask what you can do to be sure you don't get put on machines as your death nears. Your doctor tells you that this conversation the two of you are having now is a good first step. What you are doing simply by talking about it is making your wishes regarding your treatment known to your doctor. After this discussion between the two of you, your doctor will write "orders" that are put in your chart and that hospital personnel carry out as they take care of you. An example would be writing an order for penicillin to treat your pneumonia while you were hospitalized. There would have to be a written order for penicillin in your chart before it would be given to you.

In the case of your treatment near the end of your life — especially in response to your request that you not be resuscitated when you die — your doctor would write such an order and put it in your chart. This is a do-not-resuscitate order, and the doctors, nurses and others taking care of you would follow this and all other orders when the time comes.

Returning home

You tell your doctor that you would really like to spend your final weeks at home, not in the hospital. You know that your medications will help with the pain so you're not worried about that. You know that there are hospices and home health agencies and friends to help your family with your care and your home. You ask if the do-not-resuscitate order can go home with you to be sure you won't be resuscitated if you die at home. You are afraid that someone will dial 911 and the emergency medical technicians will come and resuscitate you, just to have the process of dying start all over again in a short time. Will your hospital do-not-resuscitate order work at home, too, so that the EMTs don't try to bring you back? The answer is "no," the hospital do-not-resuscitate order isn't portable. But then your doctor tells you an interesting story:

Just a few years ago, the thing that worries you was worrying the EMTs in North Carolina, too. Every once in a while they would go to a home where a family member had dialed 911 because someone had died, but they would find that the family didn't want the person resuscitated. The person was dying after a long illness as expected and the family wanted the EMTs to pronounce him dead and tell them what to do next. Unfortunately, though, the EMTs' orders were clear: when called to the home of a person who had died, resuscitate.

When the EMTs got together for their meetings, the subject of resuscitating people who didn't want to be resuscitated would come up from time to time. The EMTs all agreed that they didn't like being put in the position of restoring life to these people. On the other hand, their orders were clear. They turned to the North Carolina Medical Society for help getting out of this difficult situation.

A committee of Medical Society members and consultants spent six months on the problem, and at the end of that period they had designed a do-not-resuscitate order to be used out of the hospital by dying patients. More importantly, they had asked the North Carolina Attorney General to permit EMTs to give supportive care to dying patients but not to resuscitate them when they died as long as they had one of these forms on hand when the EMTs arrived, and the Attorney General agreed.

This do-not-resuscitate order is not a state law. It has been left up to each county's emergency medical services group to agree to honor the order and most of them have done so over the past several years. Nine counties still do not accept these orders and thus they cannot be used there. The nine counties are Anson, Brunswick, Duplin, Harnett, Scotland, Swain, Transylvania, Tyrrell and Washington. Anywhere else in North Carolina, dying patients can get and use one.

An order for home use

In the 91 counties that do accept the do-not-resuscitate order, the process of getting one and using it is not too difficult. Once your doctor has told you that you are terminally ill, you ask for an Out of Facility Order. Your doctor either gives you one on hand in the office or requests one for you from the North Carolina Medical Society. The Out of Facility Order is a distinctive yellow one-page form with the front filled out by your doctor and the back completed by you or someone you designate to do it for you. The front, the attending physician's statement, says that you are terminally ill and that you are not to be resuscitated when you die at home. Your doctor completes it, dates it at the top, fills in the expiration date — which is one year later — and signs it at the bottom. If it happens that you live longer than one year, the order can be renewed once by your doctor, who signs it again at the bottom and dates it.

Do-not-resuscitate order is not a state law. It has been left up to each county's emergency medical services group to agree to honor the order.

The back is your part to complete. The words read like this:

"I, the undersigned, hereby direct that in the event of my cardiorespiratory arrest efforts at cardiopulmonary resuscitation should not be initiated. I understand that I may revoke these directions at any time." It means that when your heart stops beating and you stop breathing, you do not want CPR performed on you. The second sentence gives you the chance to change your mind whenever you wish. You sign the order and have a notary public notarize it and you're done. If you are not able to complete the order yourself because you are too unwell or, perhaps, in a coma, the back of the form can be filled out by your spouse, guardian or next of kin.

Storing the order

There was a lot of discussion about the best place to keep the Out of Facility Order back when it was designed. The final decision was to have it by the bedside because that is where the EMTs go first when they arrive at a home after being called by 911.

When EMTs come to your home after being summoned, their orders are to try CPR unless they receive the original copy of your Out of Facility Order. They cannot simply hear that there is or was such an order; they must be given it. Keep it by your bed.

cannot. For good reasons, the Out of Facility Order is closely guarded. You can tell a dying friend to talk with a doctor about it, however. Doctors can request these do-not-resuscitate orders from the North Carolina Medical Society, and physicians in certain specialties that deal with many dying patients keep some copies on hand in their offices for patients who request them.

Can the Out of Facility do-not-resuscitate order be improved upon? Of course it can. Among its shortcomings now is its lack of portability between hospital and home and nursing home or long-term care facility. This is an issue that is being addressed, and its resolution will require the cooperation of representatives of each sector of the health care field. The development and adoption of the Out of Facility Order (which involved representatives of doctors, EMTs, nurses, lawyers, hospitals, nursing homes, home health agencies, hospices, clergy and ethicists) is proof that such cooperation is possible.

Peace of mind

In North Carolina, EMTs are usually volunteers interested in helping people in need of help. Their payment is the satisfaction they get from being successful in their efforts. If they come to your home after being called by 911 and they find that you are alive but in trouble — perhaps in pain or having difficulty breathing — they will not stand by and watch you struggle without offering comfort care. They will ask for guidance from their physician on call and will follow those suggestions to give you the help you need to relieve your pain and ease your breathing. But if you stop breathing while they are there, they will follow your Out of Facility Order and will not revive you. That is the promise of the Out of Facility Order: you may die in peace in your own home without fear of being resuscitated.

Let's assume now that you are not a dying person, but that you know someone who is.

Can you get this person an Out of Facility Order? No, you

HIV Infection in Pregnancy

A Review of Current Developments

Vern L. Katz, MD, and Wilma Lim, MD

Over the past decade the epidemic of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection has evolved from one primarily affecting the homosexual population to one that involves the heterosexual population including pregnant women and their infants.1-3 During the last six months of 1993, the North Carolina Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources reported that more than three of every thousand women tested at public health clinics were positive for HIV. Perinatal transmission is now the leading cause of HIV infection in children.14 In this article we summarize recent information about HIV infection in pregnancy and current aspects of management.

A Brief Review of HIV

The human immunodeficiency virus is an RNA retrovirus. After infecting cells, it may induce the production of new HIV virus (a process that is usually cytotoxic) or it may lie dormant in the infected cell. The cell most commonly infected by HIV virus is the T-helper (T4) lymphocyte, which is essential for immunocompetence. Widespread destruction of T-helper cells (also called CD4 lymphocytes) causes the impaired immune function (and thus the opportunistic infections with organisms such as pneumocystis and cryptococcus) seen in advanced HIV infection (AIDS). HIV also infects macrophages, which carry the virus throughout the body. Many patients develop central nervous system involvement, the most severe form being AIDS dementia. Infants and young children are particularly susceptible to central nervous system problems from the HI virus.

During the initial phase of infection, before the patient mounts an antibody response, the individual may have minor flu-like symptoms, fatigue, or a mononucleosis-like illness. Later, the individual becomes asymptomatic, but a low-grade viremia persists. General measures for treating HIV infection include drugs like azidothymidine (AZT, Retrovir), which inhibit the virus' reverse transcriptase enzyme. 12,5,6 It is also important to provide prophylaxis against opportunistic infections such as pneumocystis and treatment of these infections if they occur.

Now that HIV infection involves the heterosexual population, and especially pregnant women, several questions have arisen: 1) Is HIV teratogenic? 2) How often does it affect the neonate? 3) What effect does HIV infection have on pregnancy? 4) What effect does pregnancy have on HIV infection? 5) What can we do for the pregnant, HIV-infected woman? We look at those questions in this paper.

AIDS and Pregnancy

HIV does cross the placenta. It has been cultured from fetal tissue, from first trimester products of conception, from the placenta in later pregnancy, and from neonates and umbilical cord blood at birth. When AIDS was first described, it was thought that perinatal transmission of HIV would occur in 75% to 100% of pregnancies. Fortunately, the perinatal transmission rate is much lower than expected. In general, the rate of neonatal HIV transmission is 15%-30%^{2,9-11} with different studies during the past 10 years finding varying rates depending on the proportions of symptomatic and asymptomatic individuals studied. Subjects with more impaired immunity (lower CD4+counts) have higher rates of perinatal infection because they have higher rates of viremia, and it is now widely believed that the rate of perinatal transmission is proportional to the maternal level of HIV.

Because HIV antibody crosses the placenta, essentially all infants of infected mothers will be HIV-antibody positive. As a result, the diagnosis of HIV infection in infants must be made by either demonstrating the virus itself in the infant's blood or by finding an HIV-antibody titer that persists beyond 18 months of age. HIV appears in breast milk and studies from Africa document postpartum acquisition of the virus; it is recommended that HIV-infected women not breastfeed.8

either fetal abnormalities or an increased rate of miscarriage. But HIV infection does have an effect on the course of the pregnancy related to the stage of the mother's disease. Pregnancies are adversely affected when the mother's disease reaches the point that opportunistic infections and complications begin to occur. Even then, if CD4 lymphocyte counts remain high enough, pregnant women usually respond to appropriate antibiotics or other treatment. In general, birthweight, gestational age at delivery, the incidence of hypertension, and complications such as abruption do not seem to be more common in HIV-infected than in matched, HIV-negative controls. The current rule of thumb is that if a woman's CD4 count is greater than 300, and she does not suffer from other diseases, her pregnancy will not be adversely affected by HIV. Of course, HIV-infected mothers have a higher rate of other sexually transmitted diseases that produce other risks to the fetus.

The next important question is whether pregnancy has an effect on the mother's HIV infection. In general, pregnancy is a state of relative immune compromise. Even in women without HIV infection, the count of CD4 cells (and the count of cytotoxic lymphocytes important in fighting HIV infection) declines during pregnancy and rises postpartum.7 In HIV-infected women, the decline in the numbers of these lymphocytes is greater than in non-HIV infected controls and they do not seem to rise after childbirth. Thus, we believe that pregnancy may accelerate the progression of HIV infection and point this out when counseling HIV-infected women about the dangers they themselves face during pregnancy.

The method of delivery (Cesarean or vaginal) is an important issue. Two reports suggest that vaginal delivery, by exposing the infant to blood and secretions, increases the risk of neonatal HIV infection. Most recently, the European Collaborative Study of 1,254 HIV-infected mothers studies found that infants delivered by elective Cesarean had a 53% reduction in HIV infection rate and those delivered by emergency Cesarean, a 48% reduction.¹¹ Other studies have also found a decreased risk of H1V infection after Cesarean delivery although sometimes not to a significant degree. Obviously surgery in immunocompromised women also has risks and so we await data from future studies.

The 076 Trial

Because of the significant risk of fetal infection by HIV, and because of the deleterious effect of HIV on pregnancy, in 1991 the National Institutes of Health and the AIDS Clinical Trials Group began an international multicenter study, the 076 Trial, of treating AIDS during pregnancy. This double-blinded, placebocontrolled trial, treated pregnant HIV-infected women with AZT, which was previously known not to be teratogenic or to cause preterm delivery or abruption,^{5,6} although it does cause some myelosuppression and anemia. AZT crosses the placenta but is not concentrated in the fetus. It was therefore deemed ethical to treat pregnant women with AZT in an attempt to prevent transmission of HIV to the fetus and to improve maternal outcome.

The study was stopped in February 1994, because the rate of neonatal infection was dramatically reduced by AZT treatment! The mothers in the trials had received 100 mg of AZT five times per day beginning as early as week 14 of gestation. During labor the mothers received intravenous AZT (2mg/kg over one hour then 1mg/kg/hr until the umbilical cord was clamped). For six weeks after delivery, the infants received oral AZT.

In the placebo group 26% of infants became infected with HIV; in the AZT treated group approximately 8% became infected (p < .0000056).¹² The latter is one of the lowest rates of neonatal HIV infection noted in the literature. Maternal CD4 counts tended to be higher during pregnancy and showed a greater rise post delivery in the AZT-treated group. Toxicity was clinically insignificant among mothers and infants treated with AZT. There was a statistically significant decrease in hemoglobin in treated infants, but none required transfusion. Thus, the use of AZT in asymptomatic, HIV-infected pregnant women was found to be beneficial.12

Recommendations

The preliminary results of the 076 study led the NIH and the North Carolina State Health Department to make two recommendations for the treatment of pregnant, HIV-positive women. AZT should now be offered to all pregnant women and their infants. Furthermore, HIV testing of all pregnant women should now be strongly encouraged since there is a beneficial treatment available for women who are found to be infected. This study may change the entire approach to HIV testing in the United States. To date testing has been voluntary and suggested. We are now on the verge of requiring HIV testing during pregnancy. Similar to the way that we require testing for syphilis or tuberculosis, we have reached a point where treatment of one person can prevent another (the infant) from becoming infected. However, the social and political implications of mandatory HIV testing are immense. Though precedent exists for such testing, the social and moral implications of HIV infection may limit the debate. At present, we can only strongly recommend HIV testing.

Women who are already taking AZT when they become pregnant should continue. We believe that the addition of intravenous AZT during labor may be helpful. For women who need prophylaxis for pneumocystis, we recommend sulfamethoxazole-trimethoprim double strength, one tablet per day three times per week. This appears more effective than pentamidine. If a woman or her physician are concerned about teratogenicity from trimethoprim then aerosolized pentamidine (300 mg every four weeks) may be substituted during the first trimester. Table 1, at right, lists a protocol for treatment of HIV-infected women during pregnancy.

Summary

It appears that pregnancy itself is not adversely affected by HIV infection, but the course of HIV infection in the mother may be accelerated by pregnancy. The results of the 076 trial have changed our approach to AIDS in pregnancy. Heretofore AZT was only given for maternal indications such as severe immunodeficiency (CD4 count less than 200). We now recommend that AZT be given to all women with HIV infection and to infants postpartum. As to mode of delivery, Cesarean section may be beneficial, but we await further studies. We strongly encourage all pregnant women to have H1V testing regardless of risk factors. The HIV epidemic is here, in North Carolina. It is our responsibility as doctors to help pregnant women as best we can with their disease.

Eugenic Sterilizationin America and North Carolina

John E. Gardella, MD

During my recent examination of medicine and eugenics in Nazi Germany, I was surprised to learn that the eugenic efforts of the Nazis were part of a global movement. The Nazi attempts at racial purification through involuntary sterilization had parallels in other countries including the United States. In this paper I outline the history of the eugenic movement and eugenic sterilization in the US and North Carolina.

The Origin of Eugenics

The word "eugenics"—from the Greek meaning "well-born"—was coined by Sir Francis Galton in his Inquiries into Human Faculty in 1883. Galton defined eugenics as a science intended to "improve the inborn qualities of a race."^{2p17} He fully accepted the theory of evolution by natural selection published in 1859 by his cousin Charles Darwin, and viewed eugenics as a means of controlling human evolution.^{2p81} Galton hoped to "replace Natural Selection by other processes that are more merciful and not less effective."^{2p17}

Francis Galton was born near Birmingham, England, in 1822. His family encouraged him to pursue a medical career, hoping that he would follow in the distinguished footsteps of his maternal grandfather, Dr. Erasmus Darwin. Galton at first complied with his family's wishes, but intensely disliked the study of medicine and abandoned it for a degree in mathematics at Cambridge University. Throughout his long career, Galton was interested in a number of disciplines including meteorology and cartography, but the fields of human heredity and eugenics preoccupied him from the mid-1850s onward.^{3 p5-8}

Galton's interest in heredity, particularly the inheritance of mental attributes, was novel and ambitious since genetics was in its infancy and Mendel's laws of inheritance, unknown. The historian, Daniel J. Kelves, speculates on why Galton became interested in the eugenic analysis of heredity—an interest in evolution, his disbelief in natural equality, his views on "inferior races," and perhaps also the infertility of his own marriage.

Whatever the reasons, eugenics became for Galton an ersatz religion, replacing the faith destroyed by his encounter with Darwin's theory of evolution. Indeed, late in his life Galton even advocated the incorporation of eugenic ideas into traditional religion.^{3 p7-11}

At about the time Galton began to consider eugenics, the Belgian astronomer, Quetelet, showed that simple physical measurements (for example, the height or chest circumference of military conscripts) followed a bell-shaped or Gaussian distribution. Galton reasoned that a bell-shaped curve should also apply to head circumference, brain weight, and ultimately to intellect. He investigated his hypothesis by looking at the grades of candidates admitted to Sandhurst and found that they indeed followed a bell curve. Galton concluded that intellect was a quantifiable physical trait, subject to the same laws of inheritance that governed stature and other physical measurements.

In search of support for his hypothesis he examined biographical encyclopedias and observed that distinguished individuals from a number of diverse fields (law, science, the military, music) clustered in families. From such biographical data, Galton formulated his Law of Ancestral Inheritance, which postulated that physical and mental traits derived from all one's ancestors and that the magnitude of this contribution diminished in proportion to the degree of ancestral removal. In a second "law" of inheritance, Galton postulated that outstanding traits such as genius tend to revert toward mediocrity in successive generations. The quantitative data for his notion of the heritability of talent were published in Hereditary Genius in 1869. In 1884, in an effort to further refine these "laws," Galton established an anthropomorphic laboratory, which collected physical measurements on some 8,000 individuals.^{4 p93-7}

Galton also offered more judgmental arguments about the heritability of intellectual capacity, zeal, and industry, which he took to be prerequisites for attaining "reputation." He argued that many individuals rise from humble origins to compete with those from wealthy backgrounds. He felt that America, despite having fewer social barriers than Britain, nevertheless produced fewer works of genius than England. He therefore concluded that social advantage does not produce genius in men of only modest ability. 4 p97

Galton recognized that eugenics would influence social policy. He did not himself propose any specific legislation, but did recommend that the state gather data on the hereditary merit of individuals. He suggested that the state issue eugenic certificates to the gifted, foster their marriage, and financially reward them for producing offspring. Galton primarily advocated positive eugenic policies, but also encouraged celibacy for the genetically unworthy in hopes of achieving racial improvement.^{3p4}

Galton was disturbed by his prediction that admirable traits would gravitate toward the mean as generations passed, thereby making evolutionary improvement difficult. He was relieved when Karl Pearson pointed the way out of the eugenic doldrums. Pearson's statistical analysis suggested that the entire bell curve could be shifted in a "desirable" direction if the number of offspring at the desirable extreme of the curve exceeded the offspring of the undesirables. So, in Pearson's view, the average intelligence of the British might be increased by selective eugenic breeding. Pearson's statistical analysis of school performance led him to the same conclusion as Galton namely that intelligence and character were as heritable as simple physical characteristics such as eye color. Pearson's uncompromising hereditarian views of intelligence led him to think that Great Britain was in danger of intellectual degradation because the "cultured classes" limited family size but the lower social strata did not. Similar fears about racial or national degradation arose in other countries including the US. 3p40-3

The Practical Application of Eugenic Theory

The hereditary "laws" formulated by Galton and Pearson did not survive the rediscovery of Gregor Mendel's work at the turn of the century. Mendel had sought to understand heredity by breeding tens of thousands of plants and examining the distribution of simple traits in successive generations. In 1866, he published his observations on the segregation and independent assortment of hereditary "elements" and proposed the concept of dominant and recessive traits. The significance of what came to be known as Mendel's laws lay unrecognized for nearly 40 years. When they were rediscovered, their conflict with the Galtonian view of heredity was settled in Mendel's favor by a number of experimental observations including the finding, in 1902, that chromosomes behaved in a way consistent with Mendel's laws of segregation and independent assortment.

The eclipse of Galton's theories of inheritance was not accompanied by a decline in eugenic thinking. Quite to the contrary, the victory of Mendelian theory gave eugenics a kind of intellectual credibility and spurred a generation of biologists to look at human pedigrees for traits that might behave in a Mendelian fashion.³ P⁴¹⁻⁴ In the US, Charles Davenport, professor at the University of Chicago and director of the eugenic research facility at Cold Spring Harbor, became the high priest of eugenic research. Seeking to fit a wide range of traits into a Mendelian scheme, Davenport examined numerous family pedigrees. Whenever a particular trait clustered in a family, he concluded that the trait must be heritable. He argued that Mendelian genetics could explain not only tangible traits such as hemophilia and albinism, but behavioral traits such as insanity, epilepsy, alcoholism, and even "feeblemindedness" as well. Davenport even suggested that prostitutes were drawn to their profession by a Mendelian dominant gene for "innate eroticism." ³ P⁴⁹⁻⁵⁶

As was common at the time, Davenport equated racial with national identity, held that racial groups exhibit stereotypical behavior (for example, that Italians were prone to violent crime), and argued that such behavioral traits were heritable. Anxious to "preserve" the genetic integrity of the white American majority, Davenport advocated negative eugenic policies such as restricted immigration and reproductive limitations for the "genetically defective." He argued specifically for the segregation of the genetically unfit, and advocated castration rather than vasectomy for sterilization, fearing that vasectomy alone would encourage sexual immorality and rape. ^{3p53}

In addition to Davenport's writings, a large body of literature supporting behavioral genetics appeared in the late 19th and early 20th century. Richard Dugdale, in a famous study from 1877, claimed that the Jukes family of New York spawned successive generations of social misfits. A report from 1915 purported to show that the Jukes' family tree continued to bear the sour fruits of "feeblemindedness, indolence, licentiousness, and dishonesty." The clear implication of these writings was that the social pathologies exhibited by families like the Jukes were heritable rather than environmental in origin. Not all eugenicists believed these oversimplifications but the dissenters did not deter politicians from sponsoring legislation designed to save white America from "race suicide"—a phrase used by Theodore Roosevelt. 3p74

In the early 20th century, America's fight against racial suicide was viewed as a two-pronged endeavor. Not only was it necessary to inhibit the procreation of misfits already here, it was also necessary to prevent the migratory influx of the inferiors. State legislation to restrict procreation meant the passage of sterilization laws. Even the most militant eugenicists refused to consider the legalization of abortion, regarding it as murder unless performed for strict medical indications. Statesponsored sterilization laws were to be supplemented, in the eyes of eugenicists, by restrictions on immigration. ³ p92

minded Children. 3p93 In Indiana, Dr. Harry C. Sharp perfected the technique of vasectomy on inmates at the Indiana State Reformatory. His development of a safe and simple procedure accelerated the sterilization initiatives in the state legislatures. Indiana became the first of 32 states to pass eugenic sterilization laws between 1911 and 1937.5p50-1 The Indiana law permitted compulsory sterilization of "confirmed idiots, imbeciles, and rapists" in state institutions as long as a committee of "experts" agreed that the individuals were beyond hope of improvement. 5p51 Other states followed Indiana in quick succession. In 1909 California enacted a law ordering compulsory sterilization of all inmates of state hospitals and prisons judged "sexually or morally perverted" or mentally ill or "feebleminded."5p52 In 1913, the California law was broadened to allow compulsory sterilization of non-institutionalized persons suffering from "perversion or marked departure from normal mentality." 5p52 California proved to be the most aggressive state in sterilizing the "unfit;" by 1944 nearly half of all eugenic and punitive sterilizations in the US were performed in California. 5p51-3

In North Carolina the first eugenic sterilization law was enacted by the General Assembly in 1929 but was ruled unconstitutional by the US Supreme Court because it lacked any provision for appeal. In 1933 a law with appeal provisions established the Eugenics Board of North Carolina. The Board, consisting of the Commissioner of Public Health and other public health officials, was empowered to rule on petitions for sterilization filed by the state hospitals, state correctional facilities, and local public health departments. The Board's jurisdiction was limited to the mentally ill and those deemed feebleminded by IQ testing. As was the case with most eugenic legislation, there was no provision for sterilization of individuals with inherited tangible deficits such as hemophilia. The vast majority of sterilizations in North Carolina were carried out with patient consent, although the law allowed for the involuntary sterilization of residents of state facilities. Most of those sterilized were women deemed feebleminded, and the proponents of the law cited its benefits such as preventing the birth of more "handicapped" and the saving of public funds. 6p3-47

Sterilization laws were supported by prominent politicians including Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson. Nevertheless, the constitutionality of such laws was challenged in Virginia in 1924 in a test case involving Carrie Buck, a 17-yearold girl committed to the Virginia Colony for Epileptics and Feeleminded on the grounds of "moral imbecility." 5p88 The pro-sterilization lobby rejoiced at the opportunity to justify their position. They felt that the hereditary nature of Carrie's "mental deficiency" was beyond challenge because both her mother and her (illegitimate) infant daughter were also judged feebleminded. 5p88-91 In support of Carrie's proposed sterilization, eugenic experts submitted depositions including one by renowned eugenicist Harry Laughlin. Laughlin expressed the opinion that Carrie and her family belonged "to the shiftless, ignorant, and worthless class of anti-social whites of the South."5p89 Remarkably, this "opinion" was formulated without his direct examination of Carrie or her mother. Carrie's case was reviewed by the Supreme Court in 1927 when the bench included the foremost judicial luminaries of the century: Oliver Wendell Holmes, Louis D. Brandeis, and William Howard Taft. The Court upheld the Virginia sterilization order by a vote of 8 to 1. The judicial majority concluded that the state, which may call upon its citizens to sacrifice their lives for the public welfare, may also prevent "the manifestly unfit from continuing their kind." Justice Holmes went on to conclude: "The principle that sustains compulsory vaccination is broad enough to cover cutting the fallopian tubes.... Three generations of imbeciles are enough." Fp90

In 1940, a sociology professor from the University of Detroit questioned the diagnosis of Carrie's "feeblemindedness" and that of her daughter. These questions were answered in 1980 when researchers visited Carrie and found her to be a woman of normal intelligence. Her daughter Vivian (judged to be an "imbecile" at age six months) was an average student in elementary school before her death at age eight. In his review of the Buck case, biologist Stephen Jay Gould concluded that Carrie's institutionalization was accomplished to "hide the shame" of her pregnancy and perhaps also the identity of her rapist.8

Keeping America Pure and Strong

The external threat of unrestricted immigration was far more disturbing to some eugenicists than the prolific breeding of American-born misfits. They felt that eugenic sterilization would be inadequate to preserve America's genetic health. In the late 1880s, the US had experienced a large influx of immigrants from Southern and Eastern Europe. The poverty and illiteracy of these immigrants "proved" to the eugenics community that these immigrants were inferiors and that their unrestricted entry was a grave threat to the genetic worth of America. Authorities from a number of disciplines "substantiated" these fears with statistics showing that many immigrants received "feebleminded" scores on the newly devised tests of intelligence. In addition to the eugenics community, other groups opposed unrestricted immigration. Organized labor feared the influx of a work force willing to work for low pay and compete with native-born Americans. Many businesspeople feared the importation of socialism and other radical ideas. Given this sentiment, it's no surprise that, in 1924, the US Congress overwhelmingly approved an Immigration Act curtailing the entry of Southern and Eastern Europeans. 3p96-7 The bill was promptly signed into law by Calvin Coolidge who years earlier had declared that "America must be kept American. Biological laws show that Nordics deteriorate when mixed with other races."3p97

The Demise of Eugenic Laws

and was generally sympathetic to eugenic sterilization. A 1937 public opinion poll revealed that about two-thirds of Americans endorsed compulsory sterilization of "habitual criminals" and "mental defectives." Despite public support, an influential body of opinion began to line up against the mainline eugenicists. Vocal opposition came from bona-fide geneticists who regarded eugenics as pop science. Civil libertarians and religious leaders opposed eugenic sterilization, although sometimes for differing reasons. The hierarchy of the Catholic Church sweepingly condemned all forms of sterilization, and was influential in blocking sterilization laws in a number of states.3 p113-22

Revulsion against Nazi excesses that included the widespread use of involuntary sterilization may have hastened the decline of the American sterilization movement in the late 1930s and early 1940s, but other factors proved more decisive. Simplistic ideas about the heritability of complex traits came under attack as the science of genetics matured. The retrospective study of pedigrees, so favored by the eugenicists, was found to be woefully unscientific. One prominent American geneticist, T.H. Morgan, pointed out that the Jukes, the Kallikaks. and other misfit families cited in the eugenics literature, might as likely be victims of deplorable social conditions as victims of poor pedigree. Geneticists did not often speak out against eugenics, however, simply because they did not regard it as serious enough to merit condemnation.7p111-5

Criticism of eugenic sterilization by the medical community began in the late 1920s and early 1930s. Dr. Abraham Myerson, a professor of neurol-

Eugenic Sterilization and The Bell Curve

by Richard P. Vance, MD

Dr. Gardella's concise summary of eugenic sterilization in America prompts a basic visceral emotion that none of us enjoy, revealing as it does both our professional and our social failings. His warning is particularly timely in light of the controversy surrounding Richard Hernstein and Charles Murray's The Bell Curve. Hernstein and Murray state their position baldly, explaining that their "book is about differences in intellectual capacity among people and groups and what those differences mean for America's future.... What good can come of understanding the relationship of intelligence to social structure and public policy? Little good can come without it."

They present evidence for their hypothesis that late 20th-century American society is structured mainly on intelligence (a capacity that they claim is mostly genetically based) and that the economic, social, and political differences between the cognitive elite and the rest of the population are more dramatic than ever before. For example, they argue that racial differences in mean IQ (East Asian and Jewish = 115, Non-Hispanic Caucasian = 100, African and Hispanics = 85) contribute heavily to social segmentation. They further argue that the traditional welfare state needs to be reconfigured since it has helped perpetuate an underclass that is increasingly deficient in informational endowments and abilities. The authors do not prescribe a specific set of social polices to replace present welfare systems. Instead, they call for a debate on public policy to take place after we acknowledge: 1) that human intelligence is variable; 2) that such variability has a "powerful bearing on how well people do in life;" 3) that intelligence is largely genetically based; and 4) that environmental influences have, in general, only minor, temporary effects on intelligence.

Surely there can be no more inflammatory mixture than intelligence, race, genetics, and public policy. Not surprisingly, reviews of The Bell Curve have been highly critical. Alan Ryan points out that acceptance of immutable differences in intelligence is "in principle consistent with the politics of almost any persuasion from socialist to libertarian. Socialists might think that...the less clever [should be] compensated with more education than the gifted, and with income supplements to make up for their difficulties in the competitive marketplace; libertarians might think we should treat such differences as the luck of the draw, no more worthy of treatment than the accident that makes some of us better baseball players than others."2 Ryan argues that we fear eugenics, but not because the only possible outcome is a Brave New World, or because eugenic science is de facto disgusting, or because theories of inherited intelligence are necessarily driven by panic or superstition. No, we rightly fear eugenics because it has been used so often in the past for utopian, racist, and reactionary purposes. Although Hernstein and Murray advocate no programs of such stripe (indeed, they explicitly denounce them), it is not hard to imagine proposals for selective breeding or selective sterilization arising once again, supported by their data.

At the turn of the century, G.E. Moore, the British ethicist-philosopher, formulated his naturalistic fallacy which says that we cannot argue directly from what is (the empirical) to what ought to be (the normative).³ John Gardella (and Alan Ryan) remind us that there is still something valid about Moore's arguments. In light of the growing body of information unfolding the genetic basis of talents, skills and behaviors, we need creative debate, not silence or polemic. On this point, Hernstein and Murray, Ryan, and Gardella can agree. But until truly positive, non-destructive possibilities emerge from such a debate, the only proper, historically informed response to simplistic correlations between behavioral genetics and social policy is an unwavering No!

ogy at Tufts, attacked the idea that feeblemindedness was solely genetic in origin. In 1935, Dr. Myerson challenged other eugenic assertions in a study of the growth in the number of institutionalized mentally ill. This study demonstrated that the incidence of schizophrenia and other serious mental illnesses was not increasing; the increased commitment rates were due to the availability of better medical care and more beds in mental hospitals. These findings debunked the eugenicists' assertion that the increase in commitment rates was due to the prolific breeding of the mentally ill.^{7p122-7}

The Catholic Church opposed all sterilization on moral grounds, and in 1930 Pope Pius XI specifically condemned eugenic sterilization in his encyclical Casti Connubi. In the wake of the encyclical, Catholic lay organizations became instrumental in preventing the enactment of sterilization laws in a number of states. The governor of Colorado vetoed a proposed sterilization law, in part because of such opposition. Similar efforts derailed eugenic sterilization laws in Wyoming, Alabama, Pennsylvania, and elsewhere.⁷ p118-22

The end of eugenic sterilization came with World War II when all available surgeons were called to the armed services. Physicians remaining at home had little time for elective sterilization. Pp128-9 The US Supreme Court, in a 1942 opinion written by William O. Douglas, overturned a 1935 Oklahoma law permitting the sterilization of thrice-convicted felons. The majority opinion did not specifically mention Nazi Germany, but did reflect grave concern about the potential for human rights abuse when the state is granted the power to sterilize. 7 p130

Sterilization in North Carolina

After the War, the American eugenics movement could not recover from the wartime slowdown. Sterilizations in California—the most aggressive state in ordering these procedures—virtually ceased by the early 1950s. This was not the case in other regions, and sterilization programs were expanded in the early 1950s in Georgia, Virginia, and North Carolina. Pp. 136-8 In North Carolina, the Human Betterment League undertook mass mailing campaigns to educate the public about the alleged benefits of eugenic sterilization. In the late 1940s, state public health officials, working with the sociology department at the University of North Carolina, identified candidates for eugenic sterilization in Orange County. When the program was judged a success, it was expanded from Orange County to throughout North Carolina. Because of these efforts, about 200 North Carolinians were sterilized each year during the 1950s. Even as late as 1963, the North Carolina Board of Eugenics subsidized the sterilization of nearly 200 persons—most of whom were poor women from rural counties. P138 In 1976 the district court in Raleigh upheld the constitutionality of the NC sterilization law, including the provision for the sterilizing the non-institutionalized.

The Lessons of the Past

"...the study of the eugenic era

approaching social problems from a simplistic biological perspective."

Today there is a resurgence of behavioral genetics, reminiscent of earlier eugenic thinking. The past decade has seen the identification of a genetic basis for cystic fibrosis and other crippling diseases, but it has also witnessed a resurgence of studies that recall the writings of Francis Galton and the early 20th-century eugenicists. Scientists again seek a genetic basis of a variety of behavioral traits such as alcoholism and even criminality. Genes may well influence many aspects of human behavior, yet the study of the eugenic era warns us of the dangers in approaching social problems from a simplistic biological perspective. This point is perhaps best expressed by physician-historian Philip Reilly: "The history of involuntary sterilization of institutionalized persons demonstrates that society has sometimes not hesitated to pursue what it perceived to be cost-saving measures at the expense of personal liberties. It is tempting to dismiss the stories of the Jukes and the Kallikaks and our society's reaction to them as quaint tales of a bygone era. The better course is to remember that in the name of science not so long ago, 60,000 American citizens were subject to eugenic sterilization. We must forever guard against the kind of flawed thinking that supported this activity." ^{79,165}

Khat on a Hot Tin Roof

Ronald B. Mack, MD

When I was in college my mother's seven sisters chipped in to buy me a Theater Guild subscription for my birthday. I was ecstatic. Going to the legitimate theater was one of my major desires. (Loyola University in Chicago, was, at that time, a male-only province, so the theater was not my only major desire). The editors of the university's newspaper learned of my regular attendance at the city's premier stage productions and they appointed me theater critic, a position 1 truly cherished.

One of the first plays I saw in the post-World War II period was "A Streetcar Named Desire," by Tennessee Williams. I was instantly "hooked" and became a lifelong fan of this tormented and brilliant playwright. As the years passed I saw other works by this talented writer and especially enjoyed "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof." This play is a tragedy, in the Aristotelian sense. It induces pity and fear in the viewer and accomplishes catharsis of such emotions in the audience. It is a story of the degeneration in a Southern family—a theme not uncommon in Williams' plays —and substance abuse plays a part in the downfall of one of the major characters. Likewise, the abuse of khat, an ancient drug, and its analogues has led to the downfall of many a citizen, both Northern and Southern varieties, so beware.

The Chemical Connection

Khat is a product of a very tall plant that grows mainly in East Africa, Kenya, North and South Yemen, and Ethiopia. The first historical reference relates that Alexander The Great sent khat to General Harrar to cure his depression. In 1762, the botanist Forskal became the first European to classify the plant and he named it Catha edulis. In 1852, an English surgeon brought khat from Aden to Europe. The plant is an evergreen shrub known officially as Catha edulis Forsk (Fig. 1, at right).

Khat leaves, when chewed, create a pleasurable feeling, pleasurable enough that many become compulsive users who will attempt to secure their daily "fix" at the expense of other more vital necessities. Until recently this naturally occurring drug was unknown outside of East Africa and the Arabian Peninsula because the leaves lose their potency within three days after harvesting. This short "shelf-life" prevented the habit from proliferating, but modern modes of transportation (such as shipping leaves by air freight) have resulted in much wider distribution.

Biochemically, khat is both figuratively and literally a very stimulating substance. Its main effects on the human body are due to its phenylalkylamine content. In 1930, chemists isolated cathine (d-norpseudoephredrine and threo-2-amino-1 phenylpropanol) from the plant. Several scientists doubted that cathine could entirely account for khat's stimulant properties, and in 1975, cathinone (aminopropiophenone) was isolated. This compound has a higher sympathomimetic potential than cathine but is less stable and decomposes readily, which may explain why users prefer fresh khat leaves. In 1979 the exact biochemical composition of cathinone was determined (it is a ketone congener of cathine and phenylpropanolamine). Both cathine and cathinone are similar in structure to the amphetamines, to sympathomimetic amines such as ephedrine, and to endogenous catecholamine neurotransmitters, such as epinephrine, norepinephrine, and dopamine.⁵

Khat acts centrally and peripherally by stimulating the release of norepinephrine and dopamine from presynaptic nerve endings and causing an indirect stimulation of the central and sympathetic nervous system.⁶ Does this make you feel good? You bet your bippie—you also need less food, less sleep, and you become more aggressive.

Acute Effects of Khat

The adverse acute effects of khat chewing are fairly predictable and involve stimulation of the central and sympathetic nervous systems. As you would expect, there is increased blood pressure and pulse rate as well as an increase in respiratory rate and temperature.⁴ The pupils dilate and the eyes can exhibit chemosis and pseudoexophthalmos. Dry mouth is common as are anorexia, headache, hyperactivity, insomnia, and tremulousness. Severe nausea and gastritis can occur as can urinary retention. Patients may experience behavioral changes such as euphoria and loquaciousness, even aggressive verbal outbursts. Psychosis is rare but cases of manic psychosis have been reported.^{7,8} Users may build tolerance to this drug but usually no physical symptoms follow withdrawal from prolonged khat usage.³

Dr. Mack is Associate Professor, Department of Pediatrics, Bowman Gray School of Medicine, Medical Center Boulevard, Winston-Salem 27157.

Chronic use of khat can cause anorexia, migraine headaches, cerebral hemorrhages, myocardial insufficiency and pulmonary edema. Khat use is not a good idea for breastfeeding mothers because khat is believed to increase both L-dopa, a precursor of dopamine, and norepinephrine, thus inhibiting prolactin secretion and ultimately lactation.^{3,9} Men who use khat chronically may note impotence and spermatorrhea, and sex drive may be reduced in both men and women.³ The gastrointestinal tract is the bodily system most commonly area affected by chronic khat usage; constipation is a frequent complaint. None of this stuff for me, thank you, I much prefer penne fra diablo.

"Cat" Control and Treatment

A variant of khat is now available in the United States. It is known as "cat" and it is a new psychostimulant of abuse limited, so far at least, to the upper Midwest. 10 This product, chemically known as methcathinone, is synthesized in illegal laboratories; apparently it is relatively easy to synthesize from readily available materials. In 1992 the DEA placed methcathinone under Schedule I of the Controlled Substances Act. Drugs in the Schedule I category, as you recall, have high potential for abuse but no currently accepted medical use in our country. According to some of those addicted to "cat," it is more potent and more addictive than other psychostimulants. The intoxicating effects can last almost a week. The typical dose of "cat" is 0.5 gram to 1 gram per day, administered by intranasal or intravenous route. At $100 per gram this drug is a bargain.

This new chemical craziness has a structure and resultant effects that are very similar to methamphetamine, yet tolerance apparently does occur. Methcathinone is alleged to be a very powerful psychostimulant which can produce hyperactivity, agitation, depression, and paranoid psychosis. It is further alleged that these clinical adversities disappear after the drug is withdrawn. If a psychosis is not present, agitation and hyperactivity can be treated with benzodiazepines. It certainly does not pay to mess with your transmitters.

If your hospital is fortunate enough to have a high-tech, state-of-the-art infrared spectroscope,¹¹ this provides a good method of distinguishing cathinone and methcathinone from its precursors, norephedrine, norpseudoephedrine, pseudoephedrine, and ephedrine. There is also a rapid TLC (thin layer chromatography) identification test for khat that can be useful in forensic and law enforcement cases.¹² Furthermore, cathinone, norephedrine, and norpseudoephredrine can be detected in the urine by appropriate methods,¹³ but they are not identified by the usual screening tests and can cross-react as amphetamine or phenylpropanolamine leading to incorrect identification.

Getting a High "Cat" Down

The first step in treatment is support of the respiratory and cardiovascular systems, with priority given to control of significant hypertension and cardiac arrhythmias.⁴ Administering ipecac is probably not a good idea, but activated charcoal may be helpful. Overstimulation of the central nervous system may be controlled with diazepam, haloperidol, or chlorpromazine. Tachyarrhythmias can be treated with propranolol or lidocaine. Hypertension is usually not severe enough to warrant therapy, but severely elevated pressure can be treated with nitroprusside or labetalol, nifedipine, or hydralazine (See Raymond, et al. NC Med J 1994;55:295-303).

Would Khat Have Helped Cat?

Tennessee Williams earned a Pulitzer Prize for "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" (and another one for "A Streetcar Named Desire"). Many of his plays reflect the stresses of his homosexuality and early family life. Most of his characters are unhappy and lonely, with a deep sense of sexual anxiety. These make-believe people, for the most part, never resolve their conflicts (neither did the author) and therein lies the tragedy. It is not certain that khat would have done much good, but all of them could have used some help, possibly by "relying on the kindness of strangers" as Blanche DuBois poignantly reminds us in the last act of "A Streetcar Named Desire." □

An "Eye For An Eye?"

To the Editor:

In reference to the article by Sonis and Katz on "Physician Participation in Capital Punishment" (NC Med J 1994;55:581-6), I would like to share an observation.

Today's capital punishment laws strike me as akin to Old Testament laws. Deuteronomy 19:21 sets forth the well-known dictum "life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth." Yet in the New Testament, Matthew 5:38 states that although "you have heard it said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," Christ tells us we are not supposed to retaliate by knocking out teeth. We are not to overcome evil with evil, but conquer evil with good. Even more than that, Christ preaches "agape"—the type of love that does not destroy a person, but tries to build him or her back up.

Counseling of Patients by Pharmacists

Blessing or Curse?

Deputy Editor's note: Dr. Frederick Nesbit of Morehead City recently wrote to the Journal about certain aspects of counseling of patients by pharmacists. Dr. Nesbit raised points worthy of discussion by the community of North Carolina physicians and pharmacists. We invited three North Carolina physicians and three pharmacists to read it and comment on it. We print here an edited version of Dr. Nesbit's letter and the responses (listed alphabetically). We invite readers of the Journal to join the discussion of points raised.

"An Open Letter to North Carolina Pharmacists"

by Frederick Nesbit, MD, Morehead City

A number of my patients have complained or called my office in an agitated state after encounters with, or after comments made by pharmacists who have filled prescriptions that I have written. Because I am a psychiatrist, I see a number of patients who are prone to become upset when the advice they receive from the pharmacist appears to contradict instructions given in my office. Some of those patients have been afraid to take the prescribed medications. I have wondered if I should tell them to avoid certain pharmacies.

Moreover, pharmacists often attach labels with a variety of warnings to the containers of prescribed drugs. I suppose this is an attempt to avoid legal problems for drug manufacturers, but these warnings are sometimes a source of worry and consternation for my patients. Moreover, verbal statements made by pharmacists—admittedly in an attempt to be "helpful"—are often misinterpreted by the patient as critical of my choice of drug, size of the dose, or risk of side effects.

I'm well aware that the problem described here goes beyond the simple domain of the pharmacists. It involves the drugstores' corporate management as well as pharmaceutical manufacturers' caveats published, for example, in the PDR. Many of the listed precautions properly apply only to doses of drugs much higher than those that I have prescribed, or the side effects described are not adequately explained as being rare or unlikely to occur. Warnings about driving motor vehicles need to be clarified so that the patient does not feel trapped between the choice of taking medication on one hand or driving a vehicle and earning a living on the other. Sometimes patients are confronted by the dilemma of taking their prescribed medication or omitting it if it is likely that they will have an alcoholic drink later that day. The kind of counseling that is needed in these cases is best reserved for the prescribing physician.

In my practice, I take pains to explain the purpose of the drugs I prescribe. I review all the medications that the patient is taking. I frequently issue written instructions, especially to older patients, in order to avoid unfavorable drug interactions or to clarify anticipated or possible side effects. I invite patients to call my office if they have questions or problems that may be related to the drugs I've prescribed.

Pharmacists should avoid any hint of doubt about the prescriptions they fill, even the subtle raising of an eyebrow. Instead, they should communicate any questions that come up or important information that they uncover directly with the prescribing doctor. That's the only way I know of to deal with a complex problem. It will require close teamwork in the best interests of the patient.

Don C. Chaplin, MD, Internal Medicine, Kernodle Clinic, Burlington

I empathize with Dr. Nesbit about the complex issues that arise when a pharmacist, while advising a patient about a prescription that has just been filled, creates problems of non-compliance or undermines confidence in the prescribing physician.

In the United States patients can't buy medications at a drugstore, department store, or an all-purpose store without a prescription or consultation as they can in Mexico and other countries. Our pharmacists have a professional, ethical, and legal responsibility to serve as consultants to patients and prescribers, and to assist in assuring proper and safe use of prescription medications. Pharmacists must help and protect patients without creating unwanted fear and concern about the reasons the prescriber has ordered a certain medication.

In November 1994, the North Carolina Medical Society's House of Delegates overwhelmingly endorsed a formal recommendation from the Drug and Pharmacy Committee that prescribers include the reason why the prescription was written along with the dispensing directions. For example, a drug like propranolol might be prescribed for hypertension, migraines, or angina. Listing the reason for prescribing it in a specific case would allow the pharmacist to do a better job of advising the patient; the consultation would be framed around a specific medical reason rather than the multiple potential reasons why the drug might be prescribed. This could help lessen confusion among patients.

I certainly concur with Dr. Nesbit's suggestion that pharmacists use all their professional skills to eliminate unnecessary doubts about the proper intended use of a medication. When questions arise, pharmacists should directly contact the prescribing doctor because the patient will ultimately benefit from such professional consultations. Physicians can certainly facilitate the pharmacist's job by adding a little more information about "the intended use" of each prescription.

Joseph A. Edwards, Jr., Edwards Pharmacy, Raleigh

Pharmacists, the last health care professional to review medication use with patients, have counseled successfully for many years. The federal government, through the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 (OBRA 90), and the NC Board of Pharmacy, through similar rules, have mandated counseling. Patient counseling by pharmacists aims to enhance patient outcomes, improve medical care, increase patient compliance in taking medications, and ultimately to lower the cost of medical care. The pharmacists' expanding role in patient counseling reflects the mounting pressures of our health care system's growing economic burden and the inability of patients to obtain adequate drug education.

Appropriate drug therapy is an integral part of health care. Drug therapy that is less than optimal due to inadequate drug product selection, the occurrence of adverse drug reactions, or non-compliance leads to prolonged treatment, exacerbation of disease states, hospitalization, or even death. OBRA 90 put in place a new and evolving process that requires pharmacists to conduct patient counseling and perform prospective drug utilization reviews in order to identify preventable problems with drug therapy. Areas covered in counseling include the name and description of the medication, dose, route of administration, frequency of dosing, duration of therapy, special directions or procedures for administration, side effects, drug interactions, possible disease state effects, storage and stability, refills, instructions about what to do in the event of a missed dose, and self-monitoring techniques. Pharmacists must attempt to communicate relevant information so that it is understood and can be acted upon by patients or their caregivers. They should also exercise professional discretion when communicating.

A team approach is the only way that we will achieve successful health care. Certainly there have been isolated cases of patients who were disturbed by a pharmacist's counseling, but the vast majority benefit from these encounters. For sensitive subjects or cases in which the patient lacks sufficient information about diagnosis, pharmacists are taught to ask questions like, "Did you and your doctor discuss why you are taking this medication?"

Pharmacist counseling is here to stay and is being expanded every day. In many clinical settings, pharmacists teach patients how to manage diabetes, COPD/asthma, hypertension, anti-coagulant therapy, and hyperlipidemia; they also perform extensive compliance follow-up. Some pharmacies are linked by computer to the patient's chart so that they can reference disease diagnoses, adjust drug dosing according to current laboratory data, and enter notes in the chart regarding the patient's health. These are just a few of the methods by which pharmacists can enhance patients' use of drug therapy. It will surely lead to better patient outcomes, better knowledge of drug therapy by the patient, better drug compliance, and ultimately lower medical costs. Teamwork is the key.

Gayle R. Fleming, RPh, Supervisor, Outpatient Pharmacy, Duke University Medical Center, Durham

Dr. Nesbit's letter raises serious concerns that other physicians may share about pharmacists who lack proper counseling skills. Hopefully, his letter will be a wake-up call to both professions.

Counseling patients is the pharmacist's professional responsibility and legal obligation. "Muzzling" the pharmacist is not a consideration. Patients must be given every opportunity for success with their medications. This can only be achieved through the joint efforts of both physician and pharmacist.

Most of us who practice pharmacy can relate at least one incident in which our professional vigilance has intercepted an incorrect or inappropriate prescription and thereby prevented a mishap. The physicians I have interacted with in such situations have expressed gratitude, probably because I ventured "beyond the simple domain of the pharmacist" or dared to "subtly raise an eyebrow."

Today's managed care environment is interested in treatment outcomes. Third-party payors look to both professions to define and measure these outcomes. Physicians who have confidence in and a good professional relationship with competent pharmacists are less burdened by the extensive prospective and retrospective drug utilization reviews that are a significant part of cost-conscious health care. In addition, physicians must be willing to admit that the pharmacist is able to provide them with helpful drug and compliance information. Such cooperative efforts can only improve the patient's chances for positive outcomes.

Pharmacists owe it to themselves and to the physicians with whom they work to develop counseling skills that avoid the confusing and negative interactions Dr. Nesbit describes. Above all, we should never doubt the patients' or their physician's intentions, but we need to be able to comfortably communicate our concerns to a receptive physician. Those of us who counsel patients every day should be thoroughly familiar with the interactive approach to patient medication consultation. This method stresses asking patients open-ended questions to establish what they know and understand about what their physician has told them.

Dr. Nesbit's letter has provided a forum to discuss an issue that can only lead to improved patient care. Isn't that what motivates all of us?

Margaret Nelsen Harker, MD, Chair, Journal Editorial Board, and Physician, Morehead City

Information overload can be as big a problem in the practice of medicine and pharmacy as ignorance can. I share some of the Dr. Nesbit's concerns and frustrations, but most of my experiences with our local pharmacists have been positive. Pharmacists have caught errors in dosing, drug interaction problems, unknown prescriptions written by other prescribers, unrecognized allergies, and previous adverse drug reactions. They have promptly consulted me for resolution. Fortunately, these occasions have been rare, but both my patients and I have been grateful for this "safety net." Our hospital clinical pharmacists now round on a regular basis with attending staff. This collaboration in patient care has been helpful and instructive.

As for the "extra" little labels, personal experience has taught me not to ignore them. Taking Augmentin on an empty stomach sure can make you sick! At times patients ask me about taking medications with food, and sometimes I don't know. I ask the patient to check with the pharmacist because this information is not readily available to me in the midst of a hectic day in the office.

As for "counseling" by pharmacists, this is now required by government programs. I don't like it very much. I especially don't like the fact that mail-order pharmacies send reams of "information" to patients and letters about quality assurance, utilization review, and such to me. These faceless folks add one more hassle to daily practice.

Dr. Nesbit does not mention the "limited formulary" hassle factor. I have noted this problem particularly with patients who use military pharmacies. These formularies are decided by similarly faceless persons who do not have my patients' best interests in mind. On the other hand, it is amazing how much can be done with a carefully chosen but very limited formulary, such as we use in our free clinic.

David R. Work, Executive Director, North Carolina Board of Pharmacy, Carrboro

Several sections of OBRA 90 affect health care delivery. Among these are the provision that pharmacists collect patient information, offer to counsel patients and provide that counsel where appropriate, and engage in prospective drug utilization reviews for Medicaid beneficiaries. Many states, including North Carolina, believe that citizens who pay should receive at least the same level of care as people on public assistance. These states apply the same rules to all prescriptions.

Pharmacists are independent health care professionals. Their activities are usually focused on drugs, yet they have rights and responsibilities to their patients not unlike those of physicians. The use of pharmaceuticals is essential, but it becomes more complicated as each year passes.

Pharmacists have a responsibility to tend to the best interests of patients. Pharmacists often have access to information not available to the physician. For example, it is not unusual for patients to obtain different prescriptions from visits to more than one physician. In such situations, drug interactions can occur when medication received from one prescriber conflicts with that from another.

Pharmacists, like physicians, are subject to lawsuits if they fail to warn patients about the consequences of drug therapy. Relying on the prescriber to provide such warnings is not a defense.

We should always remember that the reason for licensing the health professions is to protect the health and safety of the public. The issue of control is fading as the roles of different health professionals evolve. Perhaps an analogy could be made to football and soccer. Health care used to operate the way football is played—the quarterback called all the plays and the players performed accordingly. Maybe health care should be more like a soccer game, in which many people advance in one direction, guiding the ball toward the goal. The US health care system has evolved from one in which physicians called all the shots to a team approach, in which one person is still captain but many participants contribute to the final result.

Francis A. Neelon, MD, Journal Editor

Dr. Nesbit has put his finger on an important problem, certainly one that vexes me. I find myself terribly annoyed when my patients fail to follow directions because of "information" they got from the pharmacist. Sometimes this happens when the pharmacist assumes that I have prescribed a drug for the "usual reasons" and often that "just ain't so." I find I must give long, preemptive explanations about how low-dose amitriptyline can be used for sleep maintenance or for peripheral neuropathy. Otherwise the patient balks when the pharmacists says that this is "an antidepressant." I hope that Dr. Chaplin's solution (specifying the indication for use on the prescription form) will help, but the pharmacist will need a whole stack of handout sheets, one tailored to each of the many different indications for a given drug.

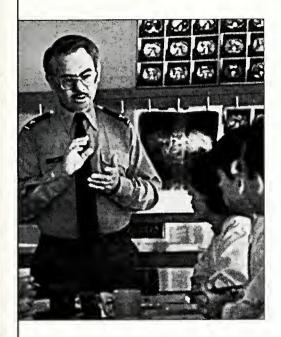

In my experience (both personal and professional) pharmacists do hand out a pre-printed sheet with each new bottle of pills, but they do not spend time assessing the patient's understanding of the medical indication or personalizing the information on the sheet. And often those sheets are just wrong (or maybe, half-right). For example, I put one of my patients on ranitidine for reflux esophagitis. When he started the new prescription, he stopped his daily aspirin tablet because the sheet he got with the pills said "Do not take aspirin with this medicine." He was afraid he might explode if he took both together! So he stopped the aspirin and ran the risk of another heart attack. It always amazes me that patients will just act on general advice of "faceless" authority (as Dr. Harker points out) without calling or questioning, but they do. Do pharmacists know when this happens? Is their feedback loop closed?

On one occasion a patient of mine (NC Med J 1986;47:519-21) changed his dosing schedule because the box his medicine came in stated that "most adults require 0.2 mL daily in two divided doses." He developed a life-threatening pontine myelinosis when he decided to try two daily doses of DDAVP rather than one and got his serum sodium down to 108 mEq/L! And just last month I prescribed nortriptyline for a patient who had trouble sleeping after an automobile accident. As I wrote in the case notes: "She took the prescription to the pharmacist and got it filled. The pharmacist gave her a sheet detailing all the potential side effects known to God or man. As a result she decided not to take the medicine and hasn't [but] she has increased her Valium to 2 mg qid. She is willing to take Valium because it is an old prescription and she does not get any frightening literature from the pharmacist when she gets it refilled."

I am convinced that the requirement that pharmacists dispense information with their pills, the popularity of radio programs such as "The People's Pharmacy," the enormous popular sales of the Physician's Desk Reference all reflect a profound misunderstanding of the nature of doctoring. Most non-physicians think that the practice of medicine is simply a matter of information, that with the right information (at the right time, in the right way) everyone could be their own brain surgeons—at least their own neurologists. Dr. Nesbit's letter reminds us of how far this is from the whole truth. Sure, information is important, but it is the relationship of patient to doctor, founded on a bond of trust, that is the critical element. It seems to me that Dr. Nesbit's complaint (and certainly mine) is that disembodied information, information without a deep understanding of the patient and without a commitment of availability and follow-up, is at best neutral, sometimes harmful. I am aware that "good intentions" lie behind the new rules we live by. Our feet tread the pavement of good intentions.

Second Opinion

by David S. Pisetsky, MD, PhD

"Tell me, Doc, what kind of name is Minkowski?"

I don't know why Bill had to ask a question like that. I know the doctor was annoyed because you could see his face stiffen. After all, he had arranged a special appointment for Bill. Although Bill is my husband and I love him dearly, he can make me so angry. I hoped he would let the matter drop, but he kept right on. "I never heard a name like that. Where's it from? Is it Russian?"

I don't think that Bill was trying to embarrass the doctor or make him feel uneasy. I just think he wanted to learn more about him before he felt comfortable enough to talk.

"I guess you could say that," the doctor answered calmly. "Russia. Poland. Some place in there. Minkowski, it's a Northern name," he continued, looking squarely at Bill. Then he flashed a friendly smile. "Just call me Dr. M if it's easier for you. Let's sit down and talk."

The office was small and felt cramped. But there were fancy diplomas on the wall, so I guess Dr. M had gone to good schools and knew what he was doing. I took a chair and moved to the other side of the examining table. Bill likes me to come with him to the doctor, but I don't know why.

The History

Bill has had trouble with his shoulder for years. It started with a ligament or a tendon that became stretched. Then the joint began to go bad. It developed spurs and two years ago Bill went to Dr. Aldrich, the surgeon everyone says is the finest around. Dr. Aldrich is in Columbia, South Carolina—I00 miles from us—and he did an operation to fix the shoulder. Dr. Aldrich said the surgery was a success but Bill keeps complaining about it hurting. He says his golf game isn't good anymore. Honestly, I don't think the surgery had anything to do with it. I know that Bill enjoys his golf, but he's no Ben Hogan.

I was surprised when Bill said he wanted to see another doctor, but the newspaper said that Dr. M had a new treatment for arthritis. Over the phone Dr. M said the treatment was for a different kind of arthritis and wouldn't help. Bill asked if he could come anyway and the doctor said it was OK with him. We drove almost four hours for the appointment.

"Why don't you tell me how things are?" Dr. M asked. He had dark eyes and looked serious. He wasn't like Dr. Aldrich who makes you feel good just by the sound of his voice and the smile on his face.

I glanced at Bill as he was about to answer. Bill is a handsome man. He's almost 60 but he has kept the weight off and still has a fine head of hair. He looked a whole lot better than anyone in the waiting room. Some of those people seemed so miserable, all bent and twisted, like my Grandma.

Bill spoke in a clear, strong voice and described his shoulder problems. He went for about five minutes and then said, "Well, Doc, I think that I'm doing pretty well but my shoulder still hurts now and then. I've been told I will have to learn to live with the pain, but I wanted a second opinion to make sure I wasn't missing anything that could help me."

"Dr. Aldrich is an excellent surgeon," Dr. M said, "and I'm not sure that I can offer anything he hasn't already tried. As I told you on the phone, surgery is not my specialty. Your kind of arthritis is called degenerative arthritis. The treatment described in the newspaper is for rheumatoid arthritis."

Dr. M then explained about the different kinds of arthritis. He seemed anxious for us to understand about Bill's condition. He then asked Bill about his shoulder. What the pain was like. Did it go anywhere. What made it better and what made it worse. Then Dr. Masked Bill questions about every possible part of his body. I was surprised since Bill's problem was his shoulder and not how many times he moved his bowels or whether he peed in the middle of night.

Dr. M made some notes on a pad. His desk was spare and had a small picture of his family in a gold frame. His wife looked nice and he had two good-looking children. A big boy that was the image of him and a little girl with a big smile and the prettiest curls you ever saw.

Dr. Pisetsky is Professor of Medicine, Duke Division of Rheumatology and Immunology, and Co-Director, Duke University Arthritis Center, 151G VA Medical Center, Durham 27710.

The Exam

"I'd like to examine you now," Dr. M said in a serious way.

Bill got up on the examining table and took his shirt off. He was wearing a pretty blue knit shirt that he bought in a pro shop in Charlotte. The shirt fit Bill well and his body looked strong. Dr. M. took Bill's blood pressure, looked into his eyes with a bright light, listened to his heart, and mashed on his belly. He then squeezed and twisted all Bill's joints, and, when he moved the right shoulder, Bill winced. Dr. Masked whether it hurt. Bill said, "Only a twinge."

Dr. M then told Bill to get dressed while he made some notes on the chart. He then starting talking. "The only thing that I can find is some limitation in the shoulder motion. The fact that there is still some pain is not unusual. My recommendation is to continue the physical therapy. Tylenol or aspirin is all the medicine you'll need."

"That's exactly what Dr. Aldrich told me," Bill said, sounding relieved.

The Real Problem

Dr. M paused for a moment. He looked uncertain. "Things going well for you?" he asked Bill.

"Absolutely."

"Business OK?"

"Great. I own a car dealership. Pontiac and Subaru. We're doing well now. I sold 30 last month. You need a car, Doc?" Bill gave Dr. M a big wide grin. I really think he would have tried to sell Dr. M a car right there. Bill is a wonderful salesman, everyone says. "I bet you'd like the Subaru. Isn't that right, Doc?"

Dr. M hardly changed his expression. He was probably still mad about the question about his name and didn't want to get involved now in his choice of cars. But I think Bill was right—he would have preferred the Subaru.

"How about the past few years? Recession affect you at all?" Dr. M asked.

Bill hesitated a second and then said, "Doc, I wouldn't be telling you the truth if I didn't admit that things got a little rough back two or three years ago when we didn't sell many cars. But we're doing fine again."

Then Dr. M looked at me and asked, "How are you doing?" Well, I was certainly surprised he asked me. I thought this appointment was for Bill. I didn't know what to say and just blurted out, "Fine. I'm doing fine."

"No problems?"

"No, of course not."

"Sure?"

Dr. M was looking at me very intently as if he wanted me to say something more but I just said, "Yes, we're fine."

Dr. M straightened himself in his chair and crossed his arms together. He looked straight at Bill and said, "Good. The reason I ask these questions is to find out whether there are things in your life that could affect your mood and how much you feel your pain. Pain can be influenced by many things. Whether you're happy, whether you're sad, whether you're worried, whether anything is bothering you. But that's not true in your case. Is that right?"

"Right," Bill said.

"I hope you don't mind my asking, but how's your sex life?" Dr. M then asked out of the blue.

My mouth must have dropped wide open but Dr. M didn't seem bothered. Fortunately, this is not a problem for us. Bill is very proud of his abilities, if you know what I mean. Bill sat straight up in his chair and in a firm voice said, "I'm happy to say that Edna and I have a wonderful marriage and that sex is a special part of it. And it's just as good as it was when we first got married." Bill looked over to me and you could see the love shine in his face.

I thought that answer would end the matter but Dr. M seemed intent on asking more questions. "You both satisfied?"

I could feel myself turn red but Bill seemed unfazed and said, "Absolutely."

At this point, I was about ready to walk out of that office, but Dr. M looked right at me and asked, "Is that true? You have a good sex life?"

Well, you might be able to ask these questions in New York City or Chicago but as far as I'm concerned they are totally out of place here in Carolina. I certainly didn't want to discuss this matter with a stranger, so I shook my head firmly and said, "It is true. We have a fine life together."

"Just wanted to make sure that everything is OK," Dr. M said in an innocent way but my face was warm and flushed. Dr. M then closed his eyes and rubbed his fingers over them. He looked like he was tired. Or thinking hard.

"How's your family?" Dr. M asked Bill.

"Good."

"Children?"

"Two."

"Boys? Girls?"

"Two boys. One's 23 and the other's 26."

Dr. M sat forward in his chair. You could see the lines around his eyes tighten. "Married?" he asked.

"One is."

"Grandchildren?"

"Not yet. But we're hoping soon," Bill smiled broadly.

"Boys are in good health?"

"Fine." Bill nodded once or twice and then said "fine" again, but this time his voice was low.

"Doc, things are fine." Bill sounded sure of himself. "The business is good. I'm a deacon of the church. I just got reelected to the Town Council and next year we're going to take a trip to Hawaii to celebrate our anniversary. Thirty years of marriage." Bill reached over. I extended my hand so he could squeeze it.

Dr. M inspected Bill's face as carefully as if he were reading the fine print of a contract. Then he moved his eyes to me and let them soften.

It was getting late and I wanted to leave because the highway can get crowded around Charlotte and we had to be home by 7 p.m. I had put a pork roast on the timer to be ready then. I thought Bill would like a nice meal in case he had bad news, like needing more surgery.

Dr. M had a searching look on his face and he kept moving his eyes between us. "I'm concerned, however, about how you're doing. I think that something is bothering you and making the pain worse. Are you sure that there are no problems?"

"Yes, everything is fine," Bill sounded decisive and his eyes didn't blink.

Dr. M then focused his eyes on me. His face was gentle and almost sweet and he looked like he really cared. And as he sat there with his thin face, those sad dark eyes, and his hair out of place, he looked like Tom, my oldest son.

I don't know what got into me. I didn't want to cry. I tried to hold it back but I just couldn't. The tears just came from my cycs and I was sobbing.

I looked at Bill and I could see his expression crack, just like a broken mirror. He bit his lip and his eyes began to glisten but his voice didn't change. "Doctor," Bill said, "I'm an honest man. I go to church and I don't lie. So I will tell you that our life isn't perfect. No one's is. There are things we wish we could change. Our son Tom has a lifestyle—how should I put it—that we don't approve of. It hurts me and it especially hurts his mother. He's my flesh and blood but I wish he were different."

I was crying hard now. I just couldn't stop. I miss Tom so much and I feel so sorry for him. Tom tried so hard to be a good son when he was growing up. Always trying to please us. It's not is fault he's a...a...I don't even know the word to use, but Bill blames him anyway.

"Is his health good?' Dr. M asked. "Does he have AIDS?"
"As far as I know, he doesn't and thank God for that," Bill answered.

I heard a loudspeaker go off in the hallway. It sounded like static and jarred me.

"Do you ever talk to anybody about this?" Dr. M asked.

"In my position I can't," Bill said. "I live in a small town where everyone knows everyone else and can't keep what they hear to themselves. I have a business and a position in the church to protect. Someday I hope to run for mayor. If my son's life were known, that would all go away."

Dr. M then asked me, "Do you talk to anyone?"

I couldn't get a word out of my mouth. I have never discussed Tom's life with another soul, even though my heart is so heavy and I need to get it out. I can't talk to Bill either. It hurts him too much.

I shook my head slowly to say no and I could feel the warm tears on my cheeks and they were coming so hard that they spilled on my dress. I just had the dress cleaned so I could look good for this appointment.

Dr. M's voice was low and gentle. "It must be hard, never to confide to anyone about an issue you have so much feeling about. Would you like me to find someone to help you? Maybe a support group?"

I knew what Bill would say. He could never talk about Tom to another person. He was afraid where the words would lead him. Tom made him feel like a failure. That his life was spoiled and that all his hard work and going to church had come to nothing.

"Doctor, we are strong people and we read the Bible." Bill began to talk quickly. He sounded like the preacher at the end of sermon when his voice speeds up and becomes loud to drill home the lesson. Bill's eyes widened. "The church tells us that sometimes we don't understand God's ways, but with faith we can overcome. And that is what I believe. I know that Tom has gone against the Bible's teachings, but I still love him because he is my son. And with hope and faith, maybe he will come back to us changed."

"Would you like someone to talk to?" Dr. M asked again, looking straight at me. I wanted to say yes, but I shook my head no.

Dr. M continued. "I think that it would be better for both of you to talk more openly about Tom. I'd be happy to help."

"Listen, Doc, you've been great," Bill said. He removed his glasses and wiped quickly under each eye. "I've taken up enough of your time already. There are people waiting out there who have more problems than I do. You need to see them."

Dr. M looked disappointed. "Speaking to someone can be very helpful," he said. "Think about it. And give me a call if you change your mind." He opened his desk, took out a card and gave it to Bill. Bill glanced at the card and handed it to me. "Mark Minkowski, MD, Diplomate, Board of Internal Medicine. Consultations Only," was spelled out in clear blue letters.

"Thanks, Doc. We have to go." Bill was doing his best to look as if nothing had happened. He reached over to Dr. M, took his hand firmly and shook it as if he had just closed a deal. Dr. M then offered his hand to me but I backed away.

"We'll be fine. Thank you," I said.

As we left his office, I can remember Dr. M standing there, shrugging his shoulders and asking me with his eyes to let him help. But we didn't stop. We walked what seemed like a mile through the corridors of the hospital, then out the walkway to the parking lot. Neither of us remembered where we had left the car and spent a half hour searching for it. Bill surprised me. He didn't yell or curse like he usually does when he makes a dumb mistake. He just looked carefully up and down the rows of cars, until he saw our '92 Bonneville. He didn't say anything then or during the trip back home.

As we drove down 1-85 in the dark, I kept thinking that maybe Bill could see Dr. M again. I think they got along well, and Bill seemed able to open up a little. I have Dr. M's card, and the next time Bill starts hurting, I'll tell him to call for an appointment.

I think Dr. M can help Bill.

I do. I really do.

Aphorisms of the Month

Daniel J. Sexton, MD, Editor

"Education"

Education is what survives when what has been learned has been forgotten.

-B.F. Skinner

Human history becomes more and more a race between education and catastrophe.

—H.G. Wells

No man who worships education has got the best out of education...Without a gentle contempt for education no man's education is complete.

-G.K. Chesterton

1 derive my education from the uneducated.

-George Bernard Shaw

The things that are taught in school are not an education but the means to an education.

-Ralph Waldo Emerson

None of us got where we are solely by pulling ourselves up by our bootstraps. We got here because somebody—a parent, a teacher, an Ivy League crony, or a few nuns—bent down and helped us pick up our boots.

--Thurgood Marshall

I have never let schooling interfere with my education.

—Mark Twain

The great difficulty in education is to get experience out of ideas.

—George Santayana

A man who carries a cat by the tail learns something he can learn in no other way.

-Mark Twain

"I can't imagine running my practice withou CompuSystems' help." Randy Long, M.D., Lexington,

Earning its way from the first day

"CompuSystems' Medical Practice Management System has been an integral part of my practice since I opened five years ago. Actually, we had the equipment in place and had been through training two weeks before opening. That investment paid off right away: In our first day, we used the Appointment Scheduler module to make 76 appointments."

Flexible software to suit your needs

"One of the Medical System features we've found most beneficial is its flexibility. There's almost always more than one way to complete a given task, so we can select the options that suit our preferences and operational needs. And CompuSystems' staff is always available

Outstanding service to stay productive

"The service and maintenance we get from CompuSystems couldn't be better. They stay on top of the myriad changes implemented by Medicare and other third-party carriers, so our software is always up to date. If we have a question or problem, we can get the help we need. Finally, consistency is provided at all levels: The telephone support staff keeps excellent records, so we don't start over each time we call, and the on-site hardware service is expert.

"After five years, I have only praise for CompuSystems, and I can't imagine running my practice without their help."

- More physicians in North and Sou Carolina choose CompuSystems' Medical Practice Management System than any other.
- Electronic filing to North Carolina Medicare, Medicaid, BC/BS, and a 90+ commercial carriers of NEIC with no per-claim charges.
- Features to maximize return, improcash flow, and increase productive
- "One-εall," total system support.

The costs associated with medical malpractice insurance have sky-rocketed. Yet health care providers cannot afford to reduce limits and liabilities to control these costs.

You'll find the solution in the Medigroup Purchasing Program, designed by the special risk experts at Cameron M. Harris and Company. By generating premium savings through increased buying power, hundreds of physicians, hospitals, clinics, and other health care providers throughout North Carolina have already gained bottom-line benefits from this program. Now it's your chance to save, too.

Get The Last Word On Medical Malpractice Savings.

Just call us for your free copy of our Medigroup report. You'll find a complete outline of the program, along with all the facts and figures you need to show your affiliate group how every member can save through this extraordinary plan. Even if you're not in an affiliate group, you owe it to yourself — and to your future — to see how the plan works.

So give us a call. The answers are right there in black and white.

Medical Protective Policyowners NEVER get letters like this!

Any allegation of malpractice against a doctor is serious business. If you are insured by The Medical Protective Company, be confident that in any malpractice claim you are an active partner in analyzing and preparing your case. We seek your advice and counsel in the beginning, in the middle, and at the end of your case. In fact, unless restricted by state law, every individual Medical Protective professional liability policy guarantees the doctor's right to consent to any settlement-no strings attached! In an era of frivolous suits, changing government attitudes about the confidentiality of the National Practitioner's Data Bank and increased scrutiny by credentialing committees, shouldn't you have The Medical Protective Company as your professional liability insurer? Call your local General Agent for more information about how you can have more control in defense of your professional reputation.

ARMY RESERVE MEDICINE. BE ALL YOU CAN BE:

AFFILIATE MEMBERS

Affiliate Members shall be physician assistants who are currently approved for practice by the N.C. Board of Medical Examiners and must be recommended for membership by a physician member of the NCMS. They may be appointed to committees and except for the right to vote and hold office, shall be entitled to all the privileges of The Society. They shall pay dues equal to 35% of the regular active member dues.

ASSOCIATE MEMBERS

Upon recommendation of a component society, a physician residing in North Carolina who has been a dues paying member of a state society(ies) belonging to the AMA Federation for 20 years and is retired shall pay dues at 60% of the active member dues. Those physicians in this category who are practicing 20 hours or less per week, shall pay dues at 75% of active member dues and shall have all the rights and privileges of the NCMS with the exception of holding office.

CONDITIONAL MEMBERS

A physician who has applied for membership in a component society but whose application process has not been completed through the component society shall be granted a conditional membership for a period of up to one year upon payment of dues. If at the end of this period, an applicant has not completed the component society application process, membership status in The Society will be transferred to Direct Member. Except for the right to vote and hold office the conditional member shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of The Society.

DIRECT MEMBERS

Direct members shall be physicians who reside in North Carolina counties where there is no viable component society or physicians who reside in North Carolina counties where there is a component society but do not wish membership in that component society. They shall have rights and privileges of active members including the right to vote and hold office.

A physician who is currently registered to practice in North Carolina and who has formerly been active, resident physician, or student member of The Society, but who is ineligible for active membership in a component society because of residence or practice outside the State, may be admitted to active membership by action of the Council.

DISABILITY EXEMPT MEMBERS

Current members of the NCMS whose disability is certified by their component society and who are retired from the profession of medicine shall be exempt from all dues and assessments and shall have all the rights and privileges of active members except the right to vote and hold office.

RETIRED MEMBERS

Physicians under the age of 70 who have been active members of the NCMS for at least 20 years and who are fully retired from the profession of medicine may become Retired Members. These physicians shall pay dues equal to 50% of the regular dues for Active Members and shall have all the rights and privileges of Active Membership including the right to vote and hold office.

HONORARY MEMBERS

Honorary Members must be nominated by the Council and must receive a two-thirds vote of the members of the House of Delegates. They shall be physicians distinguished by their contributions to medicine or physicians who have displayed an exceptional interest in the welfare of the NCMS; or reflected credit and honor upon the profession. They shall be exempt from all dues and assessments and, except for the right to vote and hold office, shall be entitled to all the privileges of the NCMS.

LIFE MEMBERS

Current members of The Society may qualify as Life Members if they have both retired from the profession of medicine and reached their 65th birthday by January 1 of the current year and have been dues paying members of The Society for 30 years; or if they have reached the age of 70 by January 1 of the current year and have been dues paying members for 20 years providing that they have been members of The Society for the prior five (5) years or exempted by Council action. They shall be exempt from all dues and assessments and shall be entitled to all the privileges enjoyed by Active Members including the right to vote and hold office. The time of a member's service in Armed Forces of our country except on a career basis shall be considered as membership in The Society.

NEWLY PRACTICING PHYSICIAN MEMBERS

Newly practicing physicians in their first, second and third year of practice shall be offered membership at 25% of regular dues in their first year of practice, 50% of regular dues in their second year of practice and 75% of regular dues in their third year of practice. They shall have the same rights and privileges as Active Members.

REGULAR ACTIVE MEMBERS

Active Members of the NCMS shall be the active members of the component societies, who pay dues to the NCMS and those physicians who are admitted by the Executive Council. Each component society shall be the judge of the qualifications of its members, but, as such societies are the portals to the NCMS and the AMA, only reputable physicians holding a license to practice medicine in NC shall be admitted as active members to component societies. They shall be entitled to all privileges of The Society including the right to vote and hold office.

RESIDENT/FELLOW MEMBERS

Physicians in a training program in North Carolina who hold unrestricted or training license to practice in this state, or physicians who are in training in hospitals which are accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals for residence training in the United States outside of North Carolina, may be admitted to membership in The Society directly or through membership in a component medical society for and during the period of time in which they are engaged in training. They shall have the same rights and privileges as Active Members except for the right to hold office.

SEMI-RETIRED MEMBERS

Current physician members of the NCMS who have been dues paying members of the NCMS for at least 30 years, who are at least 60 years of age, and who continue to be active in the profession of medicine but are working less than 20 hours per week may qualify for Semi-Retired Membership status. These physicians shall pay dues equal to 66% of active dues until they become eligible for Life Membership. They shall have the same rights and privileges as Active Members including the right to vote and hold office.

STUDENT MEMBERS

Any student who is regularly enrolled as a candidate for the degree of Doctor of Medicine in a NC medical school is eligible for NCMS student membership. These members shall enjoy all the rights and privileges of membership including the right to vote but not the right to hold office or the right to vote for members of Boards or Commissions who are appointed or elected by the NCMS according to State Law.

Commission & Committee Appointments 1994-1995

The committees listed herein have been authorized by President Thad B. Wester, MD, and/or as required under the Constitution and Bylaws and the Procedure and Policy Manual. Particular note should be taken of the authorization of the House of Delegates of a commission form of organization activity and that all committees except, COORDINATING COUNCIL OF SPECIALTY SOCIETIES, EVALUATION COMMITTEE MEDIATION COMMITTEE, NOMINATING COMMITTEE, and PLANNING COUNCIL are segregated under the respective commission in which the function of the committee logically rests. This will tend to eliminate overlapping and duplication in activity programs and result in coordination of the work of the Society in a manner to lessen the work of the Delegates during the Annual Meeting of the House of Delegates.

(Superior figures (e.g. 21) indicate the component county society from which the member emanates, as in the membership list of the ROSTER.)

COUNCILOR DISTRICTS Constitution and Bylaws of the North Carolina Medical Society

Article VIII — Sections, Districts and District Societies

The House of Delegates, in order to promote the purposes of The Society, shall provide for the organization of councilor districts and for the designation of scientific sections. It may provide for the organization of district societies composed of members of component societies.

Chapter VII — Councilor Districts

First District — Bertie-Gates-Hertford, Chowan-Perquimans, and Pasquotank-Camden-Currituck-Dare.

Second District — Beaufort-Hyde-Martin-Washington-Tyrrell, Carteret, Craven-Pamlico-Jones, Lenoir-Greene and Pitt.

Third District — Edgecombe, Halifax-Northampton, Johnston, Nash, Warren, Wayne, and Wilson.

Fourth District - New Hanover-Pender.

Sixth District — Wake.

Seventh District — Durham-Orange.

Eighth District — Cumberland.

Ninth District — Alamance-Caswell, Chatham, Franklin, Granville, Lee, Person, Randolph, Rockingham, and Vance.

Tenth District — Guilford (Greensboro and High Point).

Eleventh District — Forsyth-Stokes-Davie.

Twelfth District — Anson, Cabarrus, Hoke, Montgomery,

Thirteenth District — Mecklenburg.

Fourteenth District - Alleghany, Ashe, Davidson, Iredell,

Fifteenth District — Alexander, Avery, Burke, Caldwell, Catawba, Mitchell-Yancey, and Watauga.

Sixteenth District — Cleveland, Gaston, Lincoln, McDowell, and Rutherford. Seventeenth District — Cherokee, Graham, Haywood, Henderson, Jackson, Macon-Clay, Polk, Swain, and Transylvania.

RUN A SPECIAL PRACTICE.

Today's Air Force has special opportunities for qualified physicians and physician specialists. To pursue medical excellence without the overhead of a private practice, talk to an Air Force medical program manager about the quality lifestyle, quality benefits and 30 days of vacation with pay each year that are part of a medical career with the Air Force. Discover how special an Air Force practice can be. Call
